How Uncle Tom Felt
A Hoarded Gold Nugget
One Southern Mill
Gov. Talmadge's Idea

—By Arthur Brisbane—

ATLANTA, GA., Feb. 24—To spend a few days in Atlanta with Herbert Porter, general manager of the Atlanta Georgian and American, is to know how Uncle Tom felt when working for Legree, with the additional disadvantage of having to make speeches. Uncle Tom never had to do that.

Yesterday included 200 miles of automobiling, four speeches, that got duller and duller, the next to the last, from a truck in the public square at Jefferson. Speeches also on the truck by the mayor of Jefferson, to welcome you, and by John N. Holden, editor of the Jackson Herald, a weekly "$1.50 a year in advance," and worth easily $5.

Near a monument erected to his memory in the square, Dr. Crawford W. Long, beneath a mulberry tree, according to tradition, performed the first surgical operation under anaesthesia, removing a tumor from James M. Venable, on March 30, 1842.

The Venable family still exists and thrives in Atlanta. It owns Stone Mountain.

Next stop Gainesville, and there a visit to the Johnson & Johnson mills, which manufactures more cloth for surgical and general medical use than any other institution in the world, 6,000,000 pounds of it in a year.

Mr. Harry Purvis, superintendent, very young, pressingly wise, thanks to the Georgia Institute of Technology, whence he was graduated, shows you a perfect manufacturing institution, admirably clean, efficient, all the workers vigorous men and women of the Anglo-Saxon type. There are few others in the State of Georgia.

You have heard it suggested that men should abandon machines and go back to the hand loom and other hand tools, pick and shovel, instead of the steam shovel, etc.

Some still work with the hand loom in Georgia, and millions work with it in Asia. At the Johnson & Johnson mills, you stand in a room containing eleven hundred machines, their shuttles roaring back and forth.

Six hundred human beings work in that mill. If the work they do in a year were done by hand labor it would require six hundred thousand men, twice the population of Atlanta.

The mill runs two shifts or eight hours a day. Employes living in substantial brick cottages, well built, they pay 60 cents a week per room. A four-room cottage costs $2.40 a week, which pays for electric light, telephone, electricity for cooking and heating water.

The company maintains a perfect clinic, with six doctors, giving free medical attention to the workers and their families and a free school for children up to the 7th grade—older children are sent to Gainesville high school at the company's expense.

Two dollars and forty cents for a comfortable cottage made of brick, for cooking, heating, lighting, washing, seems cheap.

But in Asia you could hire workers for less than two dollars and forty cents a week. And if we are to have decent life for workers in the United States we must also have tariff protection to keep out competition that would make such conditions impossible.

Next event, a Chamber of Commerce dinner at Gainesville, speeches there, and presentation

18 ON SINKING BOSTON TRAWLER

CREW WORKS PUMPS AS AID NEARS

Eighteen men aboard the fishing trawler Logn are in grave peril 200 miles east of Boston, their craft leaking badly in heavy seas.

Word of a desperate fight to keep the boat afloat was radioed coast guard headquarters here in a message that reported water as high as the boiler room plates. Members of the crew are working frantically at the pumps in an attempt to keep the water from the fires.

The coast guard base here located the cutter Cayuga off Pollock Rip shoals and sent her off on a 10-hour dash to the side of the crippled boat.

What caused the Loon to leak was not disclosed in the brief message, but fears for the safety of her crew, many of them from Greater Boston, were felt here. Her position was regarded as extremely dangerous and doubt was expressed that the coast guard boat would reach her in time.

The Loon has been sailing out of Boston for two months, but left New York last Tuesday, due to return to port here.

The trawler, a 140-footer, is owned by the Portland Trawling Co., of Fulton Market, N. Y., and is in command of Capt. John Colina, of Groton, Conn.

Her Boston agents, Rowe & Sullivan, had received no word from the boat, but were keeping in communication with the Coast Guard for further details.

MAN IS CAUGHT AFTER DIVE

Diving through a second floor window of his home in Perkins st., Charlestown, to avoid arrest, John J. Connolly, 26, ran for a block in spite of a fractured kneecap before he was captured by police on a bad check charge today.

Patrolman Gerald Ahearn of Division 15 went to Connolly's home to serve a warrant. As the officer knocked on the door Connolly, Ahearn reported, went headlong through the window to the icy ground below. In addition to the knee injury he suffered a compound fracture of the nose, lacerations of the upper lip and chin and cuts on the legs.

Ahearn gave chase and cornered Connolly in a house a block away.

After receiving medical attention at Haymarket Relief Station Connolly was taken to City Hospital under police guard.

LATE NEWS BULLETINS

3 SAVED IN PROVIDENCE FIRE

Providence, R. I., Feb. 24 (AP)—Using ladders, firemen today rescued three persons from the upper floor of a burning three-story house here. Nathan E. Pockar, who works nights, his wife and their infant child were asleep when the blaze was discovered.

EMERGENCY AIR MAIL BILL PASSED

Washington, Feb. 24 (INS)—The administration's emergency air mail bill was passed by the House today. The bill authorized the army to fly the mail for one year. The House also voted to give six months' pay to dependents of army aviators killed in flying the air mail. (Details on Page 2.)

First Lady Refuses to Flee Fire

Washington, Feb. 24 (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt today refused to be rushed away from a social welfare conference where she had spoken on the parole system just because there happened to be a fire next door.

Dr. Frederic W. Perkins, presiding, tried to avert any possible danger to the President's wife by getting her out.

He simply rose, as Mrs. Roosevelt closed, and announced:

"We will all rise, while Mrs. Roosevelt leaves the room first."

Mrs. Roosevelt, whose speech had indicated she intended to spend the afternoon there, left the room amid applause, presumably under the impression that the conference itself was moving from luncheon tables to some auditorium.

But she immediately returned, having learned in an anteroom about the fire next door, and having ascertained also, that is was under control and nobody was in danger.

Dr. Perkins, as she again reached the head of the luncheon table, was asked by Mrs. Roosevelt:

"Why pick on me?"

40 SHAKEN UP, 3 INJURED IN 'L' CRASH

Four passengers were injured and about 40 others shaken up and thrown into a near panic today when a truck, loaded with coke, crashed into an Elevated surface car on Mystic ave. near Rhode Island ave., Somerville. The trolley was inbound to Sullivan sq.

Flying glass from five windows, shattered by the impact, sprayed passengers and three were cut about the face.

The victims are:

M. H. Scalco of 57 Sievens ave., Stoneham, who suffered face cuts;

Robert Schapel, 538 Union st., Stoneham, face cuts;

James Cheeney, 28 Woodrow ave., Medford, cuts about the face and injuries to his shoulder;

W. A. Lincoln, 5 Lincoln st., Stoneham, injuries to the body.

The truck, owned by the C. E. Hall Trucking Co., was driven by Philip Bondesero of 3 Mellen pl., Woburn. He told police his vehicle, traveling in the same direction as the car, skidded and crashed into the rear right side of the trolley.

The rear door was smashed in and the windows broken.

DUCE MASSES VET ARMY ON BORDER

MUSSOLINI INTERVIEW MONDAY

Premier Mussolini of Italy has answered the question, "Will War Come?" in a private and exclusive interview with H. R. Knickerbocker, International News Service staff correspondent.

His views on the Austrian situation, the Polish Corridor problem and other "sore spots" in Europe will be published in the Boston Evening American next Monday and Tuesday.

Editor's note—Italy is worried now as never before since the World War, writes H. R. Knickerbocker, International News Service's foreign correspondent in the eleventh article of his series, "Will War Come?"

Trieste, Feb. 24—This city is 70 miles as the crow flies, or 120 miles by road, from the border of Austria. Bombing airplanes could reach it from the present Austrian border in half an hour.

A motorized division could reach it, if no resistance were offered, in six hours. This is one reason why Italy does not want Germany to have Austria.

Next door is the next reason why Italy does not want Germany to have Austria. The South Tyrol, "redeemed" by Italy from Austria after the war, contains 250,000 Germans. Five years ago the Italian government announced that the South Tyrol had been completely Italianized. But the 250,000 Germans are still Germans.

Triste and the South Tyrol make together one big reason why it is impossible to prophesy positively that war will not come in this part of Europe. Today 40,000 Italian soldiers are under arms in Bolzano, chief city of the South Tyrol. They are there to "keep the Nazis from taking Austria." Nevertheless cool appraisal of the possibilities make it seem to an outside observer unlikely that war will come, even if Austria does "go Nazi."

Yet Italy is worried now as never before since the war. Until Hitler came to power in Germany, the Italian possession of the provinces she took from Austria seemed as secure as her possessions of any part of her land. On the other side

Only 24 Hours of 'Freedom'

Despite efforts to keep all facts secret, Mrs. Helen L. Eldrige, whose divorce from Joseph J. Eldridge, Boston broker, became absolute Friday, today became the bride of William Bowditch, wealthy bachelor, of Babcock st., Brookline. The ceremony was conducted by Rev. Boynton Merrill of West Newton, in Mrs. Eldridge's home on Commonwealth ave., West Newton, nearly three hours ahead of the time originally planned. After the ceremony the couple dashed to the Newtonville railroad station and boarded a train for their honeymoon. They refused to reveal where they will spend the next few weeks. While Boston business and traffic were crippled by ice-waved streets today, thousands of unemployed milled around city yards in unsuccessful quests for work.

Some 880 men were taken on by the city to replace part of the overworked 4500 the city announced were wresting with the clogged streets, but they were hired ahead of desperate married men, the latter turned away because they didn't "have cards from their city councillors."

The latter condition was brought about, officials at City Hall admit-

The result was the turning away of men who had answered the public appeal and the hiring of constituents who had been sent to the yards by the councillors.

Meanwhile, business men poured telephoned complaints to City Hall and nearly twice the number of traffic police were employed to straighten out tangles.

Merchants especially in the market district, complained of spoiled goods because of delayed deliveries. They said they had to hire extra men so trucks could be

FASCISTS READY TO MARCH ON VIENNA, SEIZE CONTROL

BULLETIN

Vienna, Feb. 24 (INS)—Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss today authorized an official denial of reports published abroad that Austrian troops were being concentrated to meet a reported advance of an "Austrian legion" of Nazis from Bavaria to the Austrian border.

"The reports are absolutely unfounded," the Chancellor said. "I have heard of no such Nazi movements, and I don't expect them."

By WADE WERNER

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press)

Vienna, Feb. 24 (AP)—A mysterious movement of Heimwehr troops tonight lent plausibility to an unverified report that Heimwehr leaders were planning a "March on Vienna" similar to Mussolini's historic "March on Rome."

Many troop trucks, freshly fueled, left all day today for unannounced destinations outside of the city.

The Heimwehr men (the Austrian Fascists) received instructions to carry rations for three days, but were not told in advance what their destination would be.

It was rumored that there was a plan to concentrate in outlying towns and converge on Vienna from all sides tomorrow.

Further strengthening this report, Vienna was completely plastered with green and white posters with the portraits of Prince Ernst Von Starhemberg and Vice-Chancellor Emil Fey. Von Starhemberg is the leader of the Heimwehr and Fey is also an important official of this organization.

The movement of the Heimwehr troops also aroused rumors that they were bound for the border as a precaution against the possible massing of German Nazis on the other side of the frontier.

However, inquiry at border poins revealed that there were no concentrations on either side of the line today.

Among the rumors of the possible march o nVienna by the Heimwehrmen was one that Chancellor Dollfuss would play a role similar to that played by the King of Italy, as far as acquiescence in the demonstration was concerned.

Nazis Are Ready for Battle on Dollfuss

Munich, Feb. 24 (INS)—The Nazis are unwilling to give any assurance further disorders in Austria will not follow expiration of the eight-day armistice offered Chancellor Dollfuss by Theodore Habicht, head of the German Nazi organization there.

Habich made this clear today in an exclusive interview. He said:

"Naturally we cannot give a guarantee against popular outbursts against Dollfuss in Austria following the unheard-of campaign of terror against our party. The bloody crushing of the Socialists has resulted in thousands joining our organization."

Habicht promised an armistice until Feb. 28 in order to give the present Austrian government a chance to agree to future cooperation with the National Socialist (Nazi) party.

"Although my ultimatum to Dollfuss has not yet been answered," Habicht said, "we will maintain strict, unmilitant legality, confining our activities solely to propaganda.

"Between 60 and 80 per cent of the Austrians now are Nazis, anyway. Our Austrian storm troops (counterpart of the Nazi storm troops in Germany) now number 70,000."

Asked regarding the European political situtiion as it affects Austria, Habicht declared:

"Austria is the foothall of a combination of two powers, France and Italy, whose only common interest is to keep the Reich out of Austria, but whose political aims otherwise are diametrically opposed.

"I consider also that an Austro-Italian-Hungarian customs union is not feasible because it is not in mutual interest and, moreover, such an union would prove disastrous to Austrian farmers and Austrian industry."

Restoration of the Hapsburg monarchy in Austria, Habicht said is possible only through support of foreign powers. The monarchists in Austria, he said, are only a small fraction of the people, mostly members of the aristocracy who are ambitious to regain their lost position.

Vienna, Feb. 24—If there is to be a Hapsburg restoration in Austria, Archduke Otto, now in Brussells, is "the only possible emperor" Prince Ernst Ruediger Von Starhemberg, chief of the Austrian heimwehr, say.

Restoration of the Hapsburg dynasty, exiled from Austria since the war, is again occupying a prominent place in European Diplomacy because of the struggle

REP. KELLY CALLS AIR MAIL CANCELLATION UNJUSTIFIED

HOLDS FARLEY LACKED LAW KNOWLEDGE

Cites Death Toll and Cost in Debating Emergency Bill

By WILLIAM S. NEAL
International News Service Staff Correspondent

Washington, Feb. 24 (INS)—Postmaster-General Farley's cancellation of airmail contracts was unjustified, Rep. Clyde Kelly, (R.), of Pennsylvania, declared in the House today, during a debate on the administration's emergency airmail bill.

The evidence submitted by Farley to the House postoffice committee, he asserted, clearly showed that "the postoffice department didn't known just what was in the law."

The bill before the House authorized the Post Office Department to transfer funds to the army to meet expenses of the airmail. Kelly said he would support the bill because "we are facing a fact."

The bill was passed and sent to the Senate later.

"Under the power the Postmaster General had, he cancelled the contract of anybody who came up the greatest airmail service the world ever saw," said Kelly.

"We have been carrying more mail than all the rest of the world."

COST IS CITED

He said the House postoffice committee rejected the proposal of the Postoffice Department to give it authority to make temporary contracts without competitive bidding, because it would be inconsistent for the Postmaster General to cancel contracts on the ground that competitive bidding was flouted, and then do the same thing.

"Already there have been crashes in the carrying of the mail by the Army," said Kelly. "The cost of planes destroyed in five days' operation of the mail is $170,000.

"We have lost six fliers and others have been injured."

Postmaster General Farley submitted a letter to the House committee, stating he cancelled contracts because of fraud and collusion.

EVIDENCE LACKING

"I can say without hesitation that conclusive evidence was not there, and the arbitrary cancellation of contracts was not justified," asserted Kelly.

Kelly asserted that former Postmaster General Brown was justified in calling a conference of operators in 1930—which formed the basis for cancellation—because it was necessary to clarify the Watres act. He said Postmaster General Farley did the same thing last year when he called the operators in for consultation on expenditures of remaining funds for the airmail.

Adams Justifies All Navy Contracts

Washington, Feb. 24 (AP)—A complete endorsement of the way the navy has been buying its airplanes and engines was given to a House naval sub-committee today by Charles Francis Adams, of Boston, former secretary of the navy, who warned against a limitation of profits to 10 per cent.

He denied, incidentally, he ever had owned any stock in the Douglas Aircraft Co. or any concern doing business with the navy while he was secretary.

Adams not only held it would be "very unjust, very unwise" to limit profits, but said such action likely would hinder future developments because designers would not be likely to spend money for experimental works unless they felt they would get it back.

McFarlane (D.), Texas, pointed out that since 1925 the navy had let 1500 contracts by "negotiation" and 300 by "competitive bidding" and asked:

"You think the navy can get the best results by continuing that system?"

"Yes, sir," Adams replied.

BROWN, FARLEY IN DENIALS

Washington, Feb. 24 (AP)—Denials were the order of the day today at the Senate airmail committee's hearing.

First Walter F. Brown, postmaster general under Hoover, denied he had told the committee yesterday that James A. Farley, present postmaster general, recently had made a "personal remark" about Senator Black (D., Ala.), chairman of the committee.

Then Farley denied the same thing.

Farley further denied he had made a statement of a personal nature about any member of the committee.

He went on to deny that there had been any collusion in airmail contract affairs since he took office, that there had been any talk of "hitting below the belt" at his conference with Brown, or that he had made a statement he had no sympathy for political investigations.

loaded and unloaded in the middle of the streets.

Public Works Commr. Christopher J. Carven, upon whom rests the sole responsibility for snow and ice removal, had practically thrown up his hands.

He admitted that downtown street conditions were deplorable and that streets in the suburban sections were nearly impassable, but he blamed it on the weather.

Commr. Carven said that most of the 4500 men who have been working on snow removal since Tuesday were exhausted. They have been laboring about 16 hours a day, he declared.

The mayor, stung by the stream of criticism and complaints, retorted by ordering the new crew of 880 jobless hired to replace those "exhausted."

Hospitals were busy because of the street conditions.

Mrs. Nora Foley, 53, of Sheafe st., Charlestown was in Boston City Hospital with a fractured right leg and right arm when she fell on the slippery intersection of Bunker Hill and Sullivan sts., Charlestown.

Patrolman Joseph Couter of Division 10, Roxbury Crossing, sustained an injured knee when he fell at South Huntington and Huntington aves., Roxbury.

Samuel Yaffee, 32, of Lorne st., Dorchester, suffered a severe scalding when he removed the radiator cap from his stalled automobile in G st., South Boston.

At City hospital also was Abraham Monsein, 23, of Goodale st., Malden, whose ankle was fractured when a machine skidded on the ice and crashed into his truck.

Not for years has downtown Boston been in such a condition. Critics pointed out that the public works department had apparently worked without plan or purpose.

At intersections there are islands of ice six and eight inches deep—then clear spots, and then more ice, ruts, and frozen snow.

Automobile traffic proceeded at a crawl. Horse drawn vehicles were practically useless because of the dangerous footing. Even a sleigh couldn't get along because there is no uniformity to either the ice, the snow or the clear spots.

The greatest criticism directed against Carven is because more hasn't done on the holiday—Thursday—when the sun melted the snow.

Carven claims that in the beginning, the snow was so heavy his plows couldn't get through, then when it began to melt the catchbasins couldn't carry the water away. Finally when it froze affairs had become helpless and nearly hopeless.

The men put to work today reinforce the regular public works employes. Most of them use picks and shovels on the ice. They get $4.40 for an 8-hour day.

The extra men were to be hired at city yards in the various districts of Boston.

Snowloaders and plows pressed into service are useless today because of the ice, and the trucks used to cart the snow and ice away are barely able to get through the streets themselves.

The grip of the cold wave will tighten tonight with the mercury sliding down to zero or below, the weatherman said today.

2 BOYS HELD IN 15-CT. DEATH

For a 15-cent robbery that ended in death, two South Boston youths were held for the grand jury today on warrants charging them with robbery and murder.

The pair, Joseph Mantsevich, 19, of Dresser st., and Alfred Melchin, 20, of I st., were arraigned in South Boston court, and though their counsel, Atty. John Donovan, waived reading of the complaints, and were bundled off to Charles st. jail, held without bail after probable cause was found by the court.

They are alleged to have confessed beating to death Joseph J. O'Donohue, 42, of 463 West Broadway while engaged in a robbery.

LEOPOLD SIGNS AMNESTY BILL

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press.)

Brussels, Feb. 24 (AP)—The new King of the Belgians, Leopold III, turned quickly to affairs of state today after his enthronement yesterday.

He confirmed the tenure of the present cabinet. Then, as his first official act, he signed a bill extending amnesty to a large number of military convicts in certain categories.

Bright sunshine and prolonged cheers greeted the King and Queen Astrid when they drove to the Cathedral of St. Gudula today to attend the Te Deum mass of thanksgiving, for accession to the throne.

Cardinal Van Roey greeted the King on the parvis of the church in ecclesiastical vestments with the assurance of their steadfast loyalty.

1000 ON HORSES HUNT PLANE

Salt Lake City, Utah, Feb. 24 (INS)—No trace of the missing Boeing airplane, with its cargo of seven men and one woman, had been found shortly after noon today, as adverse flying conditions forced searching planes to abandon their hunt.

Pilot Jack O'Brien, accompanied by Ed Yuravich, Department of Commerce inspector, returned to the local airport after a futile four-hour search. The other search plane, piloted by H. A. Collison, has also landed.

"Visibility is fair and there is a 1500-foot ceiling over the mountains," O'Brien reported, "but it is almost impossible to see the terrain on account of fog."

Meanwhile 1000 men on horseback had joined the intensive search for the missing plane. The liner could have cruised for only eight hours.

Death Toll Fails to Daunt Army Air Mail Fliers

New York, Feb. 24—With five pilots dead, three injured and six planes wrecked, the army air service today doggedly went ahead with its task of transporting the nation's airmail. Officers of the air corps at Floyd Bennett Field here characterized the mishaps as "part of the game."

The latest victim of the wave of misfortune which seemingly had trailed the army flyers since they took over the air mail is Lieut. George F. McDermott.

En route from New York to Langley Field, Va., to pick up mail planes, McDermott and two other fliers were forced down amid crashling waves yesterday, off Rockaway point.

The navy destroyer Bernadou picked up McDermott's companions, Lieut. J. H. Rothrock and Lieut. W. S. Pocock, Jr. It could not find McDermott nor salvage the wrecked plane.

McDermott, whose family lives in Greenfield, Pa., slipped to his death in the icy Atlantic hours after the plane faltered and alighted. His companions, clad in heavy flying suits and weakened by exposure, could not help him.

Only one of the five army fliers who died in the last eight days was carrying mail, the others being on errands connected with the mail service. A sixth was killed on a private flight.

Besides the deaths, three army men have been injured. Seven planes have been badly smashed.

PACIFIC SPLIT IS SCORED BY JAP ADMIRAL

Osumi Also Strikes At Large Naval Expenditures

By JAMES B. YOUNG

Copyright, 1934, International News Service

Tokio, Feb. 24 (INS)—The suggestion that Japan and the United States split the Pacific into zones, Japan dominating the western zone and the United States the eastern half, was scoffed at today by Admiral Mineo Osumi, the naval minister, in an International News Service interview.

Admiral Osumi's dissent revealed a sharp difference of opinion, with Foreign Minister Koki Hirota taking a position opposite to what appears to be the official navy viewpoint.

APPROVED BY HIROTA

The suggestion of a zoned Pacific, with joint guaranties by Japan and the United States of Philippine independence, was advanced in the House of Peers by Baron Toshitaru Sakamoto, a retired rear admiral. Foreign Minister Hirota gave it tentative approval by stating such a plan could easily be made effective if the United States desired it.

"Such a plan would require the unified opinion of naval leaders," said Admiral Osumi. "We are not prepared to carry out that idea.

"I do not know what benefit accrues to the nation from huge naval expenditures. A naval appropriation in itself is not an end. What we desire is the lowest possible budget, consistent with national security."

FROWNS ON BIG NAVIES

This statement came on the heels of the passage by the Japanese diet of one of the largest peace-time budgets in history.

Admr. Osumi declared he did not see any advantage in a race between nations to build huge navies.

"The whole of our fortifications program is in strict accord with the stipulations of the Versailles Treaty and the Washington Naval Treaty," he said.

U. S. OPENS WAR ON FAKE RUM IN BOSTON

Agents Start Hunt for 'Scotch' Made in New York

Wholesale seizures of fake rye and Scotch whiskeys, which have been flooding the Greater Boston market, will be made Monday under orders of U. S. Atty. Francis J. W. Ford, it became known today as the Boston Evening American continued its survey of liquor conditions here.

The "raids" were to have been made today, but air mail delays held up official instructions from the Washington headquarters of the Pure Food and Drug Bureau to carry out the seizures. These orders are expected in time for U. S. Deputy Marshal Joseph Winston to open his crusade Monday.

Meanwhile, search of stores here and elsewhere peddling the fake stuff was continued, with investigators particularly interested in a hunt for "Vat 6" brand of Scotch.

RUM SOURCES SOUGHT

Investigation is also being made of former prohibition liquor "mobs" now in the bottle goods business, with chains of stores as outlets for large stocks of illicit whiskey.

At least two local outfits, with New York hookups, are known to be engaged in this method of disposing of large stocks of bootlegged liquor which they had on hand when repeal became effective.

One of the local mobs, it was learned, is associated with a prominent New York "big shot" who at one time served a prison term for income tax return evasion.

TRACE SECOND GANG

This gang has a chain of bottle goods stores in New England and New York, one being located in the vicinity of the North Station, which have already been under scrutiny by federal agents.

A second Boston gang, associated with a former New York fight promoter, is engaged in the same business. Apparently no difficulty was experienced in obtaining licenses in Boston and suburban communities.

In addition to the bootlegged Canadian whiskey, said to be of good quality, the "mobs" are also handling the fake liquors, federal agents declare.

Roxbury Man Among 9 Dead in Bus Crash

Bethel, Kan., Feb. 24 (AP)—The driver and two passengers were killed this morning when a Union Pacific stage lines bus collided with a truck near here during a snow storm.

One of the dead passengers was believed from cards and papers on his person to be Isaac Entin of Boston, a clothing salesman. The other passenger, a Negro, was not identified.

(An Israel Entin lives at 3 Westminster ter., Roxbury. He is owner of the Belmont Garment Co.)

Phoenix, Ariz., Feb. 24 (AP)—The sheriff's office reported information had been received from Wickenburg that six persons were killed and at least 20 injured in the wreck of a stage carrying Mormon Church members near Aguila early today. The dead included

SURVEY RUSHED TO END CWA

A general survey of the status of CWA projects throughout the state as a preliminary to the gradual liquidation of the program was set in motion today at CWA headquarters.

Dwight R. Winter, executive director, was having compiled reports from 300 of the 355 local administrators on progress made to date and on the time it will require to complete projects.

It is estimated that uncompleted projects total 2300. Washington has ruled that projects under way now are to be completed, by May 1, if possible.

SALE OF BONDS SPEEDS PWA JOBS HERE

Board Overcomes Red Tape; Additional Projects Seen

Back of dispatches from Washington today telling of changes in allotments of PWA loans and grants for projects in Massachusetts was a story of how the State Public Works Commission here, with the aid of the Massachusetts Legislature, found a way to overcome a snarl of federal red tape and put men to work.

PWA projects which had been approved have been held up owing to delay on the part of the PWA officials in Washington furnishing funds to start construction.

The Massachusetts commission got authority from the Legislature to sell $22,000,000 bonds direct to the public which a representative of the state commission at the State House today explained would not only facilitate matters but would actually provide for additional non-federal projects.

The use of funds derived from state bonds does not mean, it was explained today, that the Public Works Administration will not be obliged to bear its share as originally planned.

Under the plan agreed upon by the Public Works Administrator in Washington, 78 allotments of loans and grants, totaling $11,685,420, approved in Massachusetts for non-federal projects, will be rushed through from the proceeds of the $22,000,000 state bond issue, in order to get things started.

"Changes were requested," said a statement from Washington, because it was found that a part of the bonds made necessary for construction could be furnished from existing funds, and that bonds could be sold in the open investment market, without calling on the Public Works Administration to buy them."

MRS. ELDRIDGE BRIDE OF RICH BACHELOR

Former Wife of Boston Broker Married in West Newton

Less than 24 hours after her divorce from Joseph Ingalls Eldridge, Boston investment broker, became absolute, Mrs. Helen L. Eldridge was married today to William Bowditch, 41, of 71 Babcock st., Brookline, wealthy bachelor.

The principals in the new romance made strenuous efforts to keep the wedding a secret.

Originally set for 2 p. m., the ceremony, which took place in Mrs. Eldridge's home at 1662 Commonwealth ave., West Newton, was advanced to 11:30 a. m.

The bridal couple made a hurried trip to the Newtonville railroad station and boarded a train for their honeymoon. Their destination was not learned.

The bride wore a traveling gown at the ceremony, at which the Rev. Boynton Merrill of the West Newton Congregational Church officiated. The only witnesses were Richard L. Bowditch, of Marlboro, brother of the groom, and his wife, and Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Eustis of Milton, the latter the sister of the bride.

Mrs. Bowditch was granted a divorce last August after a four-year legal battle. A former Washington society girl, she charged Eldridge with infidelity and cruel and abusive treatment, naming Edna Smith, then living in the Back Bay, as co-respondent.

During the hearing it was testified that Edmund F. O'Hearn, former Boston insurance broker, had kissed Mrs. Eldridge 200 times during night club visits. Their conduct was termed "highly reprehensible and inexcusable" by Judge Charles N. Harris in granting her a divorce.

Judge Harris set the divorce aside two years later on Eldridge's petition that his attorney had failed to introduce evidence that his wife had condoned the acts of cruelty she listed.

Mrs. Eldridge filed a new suit in 1933 on grounds of desertion and Judge Arthur K. Reade granted her a decree nisi on Aug. 23, her husband being ordered to pay her $1500 and $20 a week alimony.

In applying for the marriage license Bowditch gave his age as 40 and said he was retired from business. He is the son of the late Ernest Bowditch, landscape architect.

OFFICER'S KIN HELPS ALIBI OF MOLWAY

Broker Admits Trying to Evade Testimony at Lynn Trial

Called to the witness stand in Salem court today to bolster the alibi of Clement Molway, Brighton cab driver on trial for the murder of C. Fred Sumner in Lynn's Paramount Theater on Jan. 2, William L. Cogghill, son-in-law of Boston's Deputy Police Commissioner James McDevitt, admitted he sought to avoid coming to the accused man's assistance—because it would be bad for his business.

Cogghill, who eloped with the deputy superintendent's pretty, 24-year-old daughter, Marguerite, on New Year's Eve, testified that Molway drove him from the home he then occupied in Arlington rd., in the Back Bay, to his office in Federal st. at the time that the government alleges the Lynn show house was robbed and Sumner was killed.

Cogghill, who was one of the four alibi witnesses called for Molway, who is on trial with Louis Berrett, another cab driver, said that he now lives in Bay State rd., and that he was the manager for a New York Stock Exchange member with offices in Federal st.

MOLWAY IDENTIFIED

He testified that on Jan. 2, the day of the murder, he telephoned to the Central Cab Co. for a taxi and then walked to a drug store to buy a paper. He then hailed the cab.

Molway was asked to stand in the prisoners' cage. As he rose, Cogghill identified him as the driver.

It was under cross-examination that he admitted he told police that he could not identify Molway or describe his clothing. He said he did not want to identify him, and had tried to be evasive "to fool" the police."

"Were you telling the police the truth when you said you could not recognize Molway?" demanded Dist.-Atty. Hugh A. Cregg.

"I want to refuse to answer that question," replied the broker.

It was on re-direct examination by Molway's lawyer, John P. Kane, that Cogghill said he had sought to mislead police because he did not want to become "mixed up" in the case.

JUDGE GLARES

Judge Hammond glared at him and sternly demanded:

"When you knew that a man was charged with murder, you were still willing to be evasive in giving answers to police for purely business reasons?"

"Yes, for purely selfish business reasons," came the answer.

"That's all!" snapped the judge as he turned his back on the witness.

The three other witnesses, who also testified that Molway was in Boston at the time the Lynn murder is said to have been committed, are Alfred Bishop of Watertown, Michael Whelan of Malden and Francis Caulder of Boston. They all told of seeing him in the G. and M. restaurant at Dwight and Tremont sts. between 9 and 10 a. m. on January 2.

Bishop, also a cab driver, testified he was sure Molway was in the lunch room at 9:45 a. m. because he had an appointment with him at 10 and arrived early. He said that Richard Cann, the restaurant manager; Francis Caulder, a counterman, and another counterman whose name he could not recall also were in the place. Molway left a few minutes before 10, he testified, at a word of CQ in the direction of South Boston.

Caulder, who lives at 532 Tremont st., and Whelan told similar stories.

Caulder was forced to admit he had been involved in three Suffolk County motor law violations—in two of them under aliases.

It had been hoped the case might be ready for the jury today, but as the session wore on it became certain it would reach into next week.

The broker, whose name was announced to police reporters as W. Lawrence Cogghill at the time of his marriage in New York, is the son of Mrs. Hannah Cogghill, of Pilgrim rd., and at one time attended the Boston University School of Business Administration.

BISHOP AND AID GET DEATH THREATS

Plot on District Attorney Is Revealed in Probe of Beating

Threats to "bump off" Dist. Atty. Warren L. Bishop of Middlesex County, were revealed today at the same time that the prosecutor sought to learn the whereabouts of Charles H. Jackson, of, 97 Kingsman st., Everett, one of his investigators.

Earlier today, Jackson told Division 4 police that he had been robbed and beaten by two men who burst into a cab in which he was riding. Then he disappeared, Dist. Atty. Bishop revealed.

The news that Bishop's life had been threatened was revealed when he said that Jackson, who has been investigating the slot machine racket for him, has also received threatening letters. Jackson failed to report to Bishop after telling Boston police of the attack, and the district attorney immediately launched a search for him.

The alleged assault and robbery, according to Jackson, occurred on Albany st., after he had started home with the girls in a taxi from the cafe. He told police the two men entered the cab as it was starting, and forced the operator to drive to Albany st.

Jackson said he drew a gun when one of the men made improper advances to one of the girls, and the beating and robbery followed.

HEARINGS OPEN ON FISH COST

Just what happens to a poor dead haddock from the time it is brought in to Fish Pier until it shows up on the storeman's tray as a fillet is going to have a lot to do with the establishment of an NRA code for the fishermen.

At hearings today at Hotel Statler representatives of the fish retailers denied charges of racketeering and defended the difference in the price paid at the pier end that charged the housewife.

Atty. Saul A. Herzog, agent for five New England fishing associations, told the Federal NRA Commission of the large amount of waste in dressing fish, and the cost of icing and transportation. He said this cost is out of proportion to the original cost at the pier.

Welfare Worker Appeals for Men's Raiment

The following appeal, received by the Boston Evening American, from Mrs. Nellie M. Duncan of the Volunteers of America, 25 Brattle st., Boston, speaks for itself:

"May I make a plea through your columns for gifts of used shoes, overcoats, suits, shirts, underclothing and socks, for single unemployed men, hundreds of whom apply at our Welfare Center for assistance. No sooner do we receive a bundle of clothing than it is gone. We hold nothing. We sell nothing.

"It is heartbreaking to be unable to help young men, when they come in with wet clothing, broken shoes, thin sox, when they have any, and threadbare overcoats.

"In the name of our common humanity, we must see that they have at least food, shelter and clothing. ## "Ghost" Guns Roar When Car Halts on Acton Road

A hand-to-hand battle, shooting and injury of a Quincy bus driver, all under cover of early morning darkness on the lonely Acton-Westford road, today gave authorities a mystery they were hours trying to unravel.

A New England Transportation bus, four trucks and a mysterious automobile bearing New Hampshire registration plates were centered in the affray. Somebody drew a gun and did some shooting, but police refused to say who.

Two suspects were arrested at a funeral in Maynard shortly after noon, but police refused to say why.

It was indicated, however, that one may have been the man who did the shooting; a former Lowell police officer who only last Wednesday defaulted in Lowell court a charge of breaking and entering and larceny in the night time.

John Shaparios, of Germain ave., Quincy, was reported to have been run down by a machine, and both ankles injured. He was treated at the Emerson Hospital in Concord by Dr. R. Fulton Johnston.

So far as could be learned the bus skidded off the road into a snowbank.

Four trucks pulled up, and the drivers pitched in to help the bus operator.

Then came a touring car with two or three men aboard. The car bore New Hampshire plates.

One of the men yelled:

"Get off the road. Let us get by."

A truck driver responded in no polite terms, and the men leaped from the touring car and a free-for-all started.

One of the newcomers drew a pistol and started to shoot. The men leaped back into their machine and drove away.

It was at that time that Shaparios was run down, but nobody seems to know who ran him down.

COCKTAIL CLUB RULE FOUGHT

The "cocktail" rumpus in the Quincy Woman's Club, is paying a dividend.

Agitation which developed after a Valentine Day party at which four members of the junior division were requested to leave on the ground they had drunk cocktails before the party, has foamed over.

A recommendation from the board of governors that membership of the junior division be limited to women between the ages of 16 and 23 years, is the latest effervescence.

The junior division at present comprises 94 members, of whom 49 are married, so that the younger members consider the latest move an attempt to oust most of them.

The club charter prohibits request for resignations.

As a result the juniors are rallying under the leadership of Mrs. Ethel Helm Munroe, attractive young matron and artist, prepared to fight to the last gasp.

ENIDHENNESSEY CONTRADICTED

Ahern, the undertaker who summoned police to the Wynekoop home the night the body of Rheta Gardner Wynekoop was discovered on an operating table, was the first witness today against Dr. Alice Lindsay Wynekoop, accused of murdering her daughter-in-law.

Ahern contradicted testimony of Miss Enid Hennessey, school teacher boarder at the Wynekoop home, given yesterday, that Dr. Catherine Wynekoop, daughter of the defendant, in the presence of Ahern, had taken a pencil that night and lifted the blanket from the body of Rheta, exposing the bullet wound.

JESSIE'S CLAIM TO INSURANCE POSTPONED

Mrs. Jessie Costello's efforts to obtain the proceeds of $1300 life insurance policies carried by her fire-captain husband, of whose alleged murder she was acquitted, met with another setback today.

John J. Costello, her father-in-law, named as the beneficiary in the policies, through his attorney filed with Judge William Fay in Peabody court an answer to questions propounded by her attorneys, flatly refusing to waive his right to the money or to give it to Mrs. Costello and her children.

Costello was not in court, his counsel presenting a physician's certificate stating it would be inadvisable for him to leave his home at 78 Lowell st., Peabody, to attend the hearing. It was postponed for one week.

Judge Fay is to determine who is to be the beneficiary of the policies.

The policies were taken out before the marriage of the fire captain, and his father was named as beneficiary.

Mrs. Costello claims that the money her husband paid in premiums on these policies since 1921, would have gone towards the care of herself and her children.

These same policies played a large part in the murder trial, in which Mrs. Costello was found not guilty of poisoning her husband.

to your narrator of a genuine gold nugget, found in the Georgia mountains where, probably, there is plenty more gold. The writer, who desires to hoard this gold, nicely mounted on black velvet in a little box, hopes that President Roosevelt and Secretary Morgenthau will accept the excuse that a poor woman of the London slums offered to a severe judge who criticized her because her baby had no authentic father, "May it please Your Worship, it is a very small baby," she said. It is a small nugget, but full of interesting possibilities and suggestions of wealth untold "in them hills."

Of course, if the government must have it, the nugget will be shipped to Washington and added to the other seven thousand million dollars worth.

At that Gainesville Chamber of Commerce dinner the two local editors, Albert S. Haxely, of the Gainesville News, and A. F. Dean of the Gainesville Eagle, both weeklies, sit side by side, without a blow or a cross look. Mr Dean, who is very young, replying to the kind words of Mr. Haxy, reminded him that he did pray in Macbeth's "Tale told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing," but added that he was not referring to Mr. Hardy's editorial page in the rival Gainesville News.

Early yesterday morning, interviewers with youthful editors of the future, Lulu Ames, editor of "Agnostic," published by the students of Agnes Scott College, Louie Marsh and George Goodwin of the "Tattler," published by the boys' high school, and Bill Watson, editor of the "Modern Knight," published by the Central night school, extremely intelligent young people.

Lulu Ames will live to be a successful editor of a paper if she sticks to journalism, but it would be much better to marry and be the mother of several little editors and direct them.

Next a visit to the State Capitol and the office of Governor Talmadge, of Georgia, who introduces you first to Mr. Osborne, former governor of Michigan, then to all the young ladies that work at type writing and otherwise in his immediate surroundings. They are nearly all as blonde as the young lady in Lohengrin, and some more so.

When you observe Governor Talmadge's concentrated look, and powerful jaw, you know that the farmers of Georgia elected somebody.

Farmers did it, for the governor did not carry a single city or town big enough to have paved streets or street car tracks. Many citizens, highly respectable, do not approve him.

But he has reduced the cost of electric light, gas, power and telephone, and cut the price of an automobile license to three dollars. Many Georgians approve of all that.

Governor Talmadge's motto is: "Keep the government poor and you will keep it honest." He says that when you allow a government to collect vast sums of money there is always a politician to steal it. Washington might think about that.

The governor, for farm relief, would have the farmers stop all work every seventh year, except production of milk, eggs, watermelons, peaches, and other perishable necessities.

This would give consumers a chance to use farm surplus, and according to Governor Talmadge, in that farmers' "sabbatical year" the boll weevil and other agricultural pests would die out because they would not go a whole year without anything to cultivate to steal it. Washington might think about that.

The governor, for farm relief, would have the farmers devote to "politics" barbecues, running around to see his neighbors, motoring through the country and getting younger.

Divine command orders the individual to rest one day in seven. Common sense, according to Governor Talmadge, tells the farmers to rest one year in seven.

In addition, says Governor Talmadge, the farmers need more, better and cheaper fertilizer and cheaper transportation.

Lips, Not Eyes, Show Soul

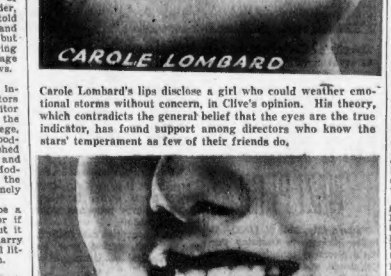
Miriam Hopkins' lips offer great contrast, according to Henry Clive, noted artist, who believes lips, not eyes, are the mirror of a woman's soul. Miss Hopkins' lips show she is inwardly emotional and outwardly calm. She is now appearing at the Metropolitan Theater.

Claudette Colbert's lips disclose a nature that is strikingly ambitious, says Artist Clive. Her lips are the reverse of Miss Hopkins'. The lower lip is full and the upper is almost a horizontal line. The Claudette temperature is plainly revealed in her lips, the artist declares.

Carole Lombard's lips disclose a girl who could weather emotional storms without concern, in Clive's opinion. His theory, which contradicts the general belief that the eyes are the true indicator, has found support among directors who know the stars' temperament as few of their friends do.



Jean Harlow's lips, Clive explains, are full and firm, indicating quite plainly a temperament of great extremes. "She is bound to suffer either with happiness or revel in utter happiness," says Clive. "There are no halfway measures with Miss Harlow and her lips prove it. "By their lips and not their eyes shall the artist know them." (International News Photo.)

U. S. TO CANCEL FLEET CRUISE

San Diego, Cal., Feb. 24 (INS)—Orders canceling the cruise of the United States fleet to the Atlantic coast in April are expected momentarily at 11th naval district headquarters here, International News Service was reliably informed today.

Specific reasons for the proposed change of orders was not learned, but it was understood several of the fighting craft were in need of repairs at Mare Island, Cal., while others were reported behind schedule in gunnery practice.

The fleet will leave here as scheduled April 9 but will travel only as far as Coco Solo, C. Z., returning here about the first of May, it was reported.

One battleship, a cruiser and six destroyers of the Atlantic fleet may continue to the east coast from Panama, but the other craft will return here to continue gunnery practice and tactical maneuvers, navy men understood.

Washington, Feb. 24 (AP)—The Navy Department is quietly studying a plan for abandonment of all military and naval fortification and bases in the Philippines in event of independence for the islands.

The withdrawal would place Pearl Harbor in Hawaii as the naval outpost in the Pacific, and would radically alter American operations in the Far East.

At present the navy maintains a major fortified naval base at Corregidor Island, in the entrance to Manila Bay, which is the headquarters for the Asiatic fleet.

In addition to this and other other small naval stations, the government owns a dozen forts and army camps at which approximately 5500 regular army troops and 6000 Philippine scouts now are stationed.

Friends Desert Donnellon, Only 15 Relatives at Rites

In life, John A. Donnellon numbered countless "friends," in death today only fifteen persons, mostly relatives, followed his body to the tomb in which it was placed at New Calvary Cemetery.

Donnellon died in the electric chair Thursday morning for the murder of a Somerville gasoline station attendant.

But there was no fanfare, none of the thrill hunters and tribute that the lawless are supposed to pay to fallen friends, as simple committal services were read over his body in a Charlestown funeral parlor, two blocks from the state prison where he died by "judicial homicide."

Judge William M. McDonald of Charlestown, his counsel during the fight to escape the chair, was one of Donnellon's mourners.

Six youths and men, some of them related to the dead boy, were pallbearers. They were George Horan, Edward Kearn, William Manning, Walter Bielfire, Joseph Cough and William Smith. Donnellon's sister and other relations made up the rest of the cortege.

Rev. Ralph W. Farrell, the chaplain who consoled the youth in his last hours of life, read the simple ritual that preceded his interment. Fr. Farrell announced that a requiem mass would be sung some day next week.

Herman Snyder has already been buried in Melrose, but a plot in Potter's Field is reported as Bulla's lasting resting place.

Harvard Medical School will not accept the body of Bull and his mother, who left for Brooklyn yesterday, declared she had no funds to bury her son. Unless other arrangements can be made, it is probable the Boston overseers of public welfare will take charge of the burial.

Duce Masses Troops for War

By H. R. KNICKERBOCKER

of the Brenner Pass was only little Austria, a nation of seven million with an army of 20,000. Italy felt safer than she had felt in centuries.

The Austro-Hungarian empire, with its 57,000,000 inhabitants, its ambitious monarchy, its limitless desire for territorial expansion, had always threatened Italy. When the breakup of that empire came and left tiny Austria, a comfortable little pillow between Italy and the German Reich, Italy felt the solution was ideal.

Fear German Nazis Have Eyes on Trieste

Today, in place of the Austro-Hungarian empire of 57,000,000 ambitious but, nevertheless, easy-going Hapsburg subjects, there is about to appear on the northern frontier of Italy a nation of 72,000,000 German Nazis, who may be a number of things, but not easy-going. The South Tyrol would be one step away from the Nazi Tyrol. Trieste would be one hop from the border.

This port was Italy's chief prize from the war. Propaganda to bring Italy into the war on the side of the Allies showed an Italian soldier peering over the trenches, with his bayonet casting a shadow that led to the port of Trieste. It is a prize worth coveting.

Along the shallow half-moon of its harbor banks the wharves of Trieste are numerous enough to house the steamships of a modern armada. Electric cranes, railway terminals, unloading devices of the most efficient variety make Trieste the best developed port on the Adriatic. As we drive along the waterfront and emerge on one tip of the half-moon, the city of 250,000 rises before us on low hills. Its houses, sepia and yellow, blend against the soft Italian sky, in a picture of southern harmony. The markets are full of tangerines, olives, fresh vegetables.

Back in bleak Berlin it will be another 60 days before spring comes. Sun like this, in Trieste will not come to Berlin at all. Germans love the sun. They grow ecstatic over the Italian skies. Before the war their chief complaint was that Germany had "no place in the sun." They meant it symbolically.

They meant that Germany had become a unified nation only after 1871, after the other great powers had already divided up the colonial countries. But Germans think of the sun not only as a symbol of economic advantages. They think of it literally, sentimentally, wishfully.

But Trieste has much more than a sentimental attraction for a northern race that lacks sunshine. Trieste is half as far from Bavaria as Bavaria is from Hamburg. Freight charges for all the lower third of Germany would be cheaper via Trieste than via Germany's North Sea ports. Germany, therefore, has never been within reaching distance of the Adriatic. Tomorrow Germany, the greatly German, a Germany stronger than ever before, may be within one short step of Trieste.

That, in a nutshell, is one of the reasons for "all the excitement about Austria." It is at any rate one of the chief reasons for the Italian excitement. Whether Germany or anybody in authority in Germany would contemplate taking that short step seems improbable for at least as far as one can foresee. But that is not sufficient for Italy. Italy is worried not about what one can foresee tomorrow but about what one can't foresee day after tomorrow.

She is worried enough to have ordered her crack army corps, a motorized corps capable of moving at 30 miles an hour with all equipment, from Verona to Bolzano, within striking distance of the Austrian frontier. The new military roads could carry the 40,000 men of the crack corps over the Brenner in a night's march.

Miles of Docks Idle on Trieste Waterfront

In the last analysis that crack army corps is in Bolzano to protect Trieste as well as the South Tyrol. Trieste has for the moment other worries. Against these imposing docks of hers lie today but half a dozen ships. Last year only 3,000,000 tons of goods went through the port compared to 6,000,000 in 1913.

In 1933 nearly 40 persons per 100,000 of population committed suicide while the next most suicidal city in Italy, Bologna, had only 19 suicides per 100,000. Because when Trieste went Italian she lost all that economic hinterland of Austria-Hungary that had made her great port.

Yet Trieste is better off than he, sister port, Fiume, an hour and a half by automobile across the Istrian peninsula. The road is another of the magnificent new military roads built by the Italian government since the war.

From its higher points the view of the Jugoslav-Italian frontier shows how deeply post-war Italy has thought in terms of war-like defenses. The frontier here is fortified, from the tips of the Alps to their bases, with gun emplacements, machine-gun nests, pill boxes, barbed-wire.

In Fiume only a tiny river separates Italy from Jugoslavia on the one side is Fiume, on the other the Jugoslav port of Susak. D'Annunzio took Fiume for the glory of Italy, but today in the port of Fiume the docks are even emptier than in Trieste. Warehouses stand empty, broken-windowed, deserted. The cafes are bare of guests: the silence of the streets hardly broken by the sound of motor horns.

Just across the river the Jugoslav port of Susak hums with life. Its diminutive harbor is crowded with ships, not an empty place in sight. Stevedores bend under massive sacks of grain and teams of broad-beamed horses haul tons of lumber up and down the narrow lanes that serve one of the smallest and busiest ports in the world. All the modern machine of Fiume, its capacious docks, stand idle. Susak wrestles its cargoes in and out by hand. But Fiume is Italian today and Susak Jugoslavian. Barbed wire and machine guns make the borders; not economics.

Just a year ago the danger of war between Jugoslavia and Italy was great. Jugoslav patriots had demolished statues of the Lion of Venice in a town on the Dalmatian coast. Italian patriots planned to revenge the insult and make it an excuse to regain for Italy that part of Dalmatia which centuries ago was Venetian and which had been promised to Italy in the secret treaty of London of 1915. The plan was checked in time, and before fresh trouble could arise, Hitler rose to supreme power in Germany.

His coming changed the aspect of the Italian-Jugoslav conflict. For the moment, at any rate, their quarrels became secondary. Here, too, Hitler has proved a peacemaker, paradoxically, ironically, perhaps, but nevertheless a peacemaker. For Italy's attention today has turned from the Jugoslav frontier to the Brenner, and the army corps that counts in the north of Italy is the army corps of Bolzano.

Duce's Only Aim Is One of Peace

But Mussolini is anxious above all things to keep the peace. He does not want to use the Bolzano army corps. He has tried to bind the present Austria and Hungary to Italy by economic ties, and to strengthen them to resist the Nazi push. Today he has given Austria the right to import through Trieste, cotton, coffee, cocoa and a series of other articles, not only duty free, but with a rebate on handling charges that amounts to the freight from Trieste to Vienna. These and other economic measures will be tried. Nevertheless the Italian army corps in Bolzano still represents the most important political element in the Austrian problem.

Trieste, Fiume, all northern Italy are constantly aware that army corps is there. Elsewhere only the chancelleries of Berlin, Paris, London are sufficiently alive to Europe's troubles to be considering today what it means. Would it march? If it did, then what?

Only Rome knows the answers.

between Premier Mussolini of Italy and Chancellor Hitler of Germany for power over the little republic.

Reports from Brussels, denied at Castle Stenockerzeel there, and also at Monarchist headquarters here, state that Otto is getting ready to return to Vienna, despite the law which exiles his family. If Duce is said to back a monarchial restoration as a means of thwarting the aims of Austrian Nazis to gain control of the government.

Prince Von Starhemberg's Heimwehr brand of Fascism is known to be favorable to Italy, while Chancellor Dollfuss is said to be considering bringing Archduke Otto to Austria for a "trial visit" to obtain public reaction.

DEMANDS BERLIN PLEDGE

Thus Prince Von Starhemberg's words were significant when in an exclusive interview he declared:

"Reports that I am aiming at the crown are entirely untrue. I will not be a competitor of the Hapsburgs, though the question of the monarchy can not yet be answered. Otto is the only possible emperor.

"In any case, I am opposed to an 'Anschluss' with Germany, whether the Nazis rule Germany or not. But an understanding with Germany is possible when Hitler pledges clearly his recognition of Austria's independence and territorial integrity."

OPPOSES POGROMS

Asked how the Heimwehr stands on the question of rights of Jews, Von Starhemberg replied:

"We believe that excessive influence by Jews in politics is not fair, but we oppose any anti-semitism by force. I think it is barbarism to say that only men belonging to a certain party or group are full citizens, and that others are second-class citizens."

As to the fate of socialist prisoners taken in the suppression of socialists by the government a week ago, Von Starhemberg asserted:

"I always have opposed hanging. If execution of a death sentence cannot be avoided, it should be carried out by shooting, because our opponents were brave soldiers. We are striving to get those still in prison before ordinary civil courts instead of courts-martial."

He expressed hope for a customs union as the foundation of a political bloc linking Austria, Italy and Hungary.

PREMIERE OF COMEDY At Plymouth Monday -:- State Premiere Ushers in New, and a True Star, ANNA STEN, IN FILM "NANA"

Harry Wagstaff Gribble Gives His Latest Contribution to American Stage

By GEORGE HOLLAND

Three things considered, the week theatrically might be called with some justice, Harry Wagstaff Gribble Week in Boston. The noted young director-author, who began his work in the theater at the old Castle Square Theater, brings his newest comedy, "The Perfumed Lady," to the Plymouth Theater, Monday night. He is producing "The Perfumed Lady," and, of course, has doubled as playwright and director as well.

The Plymouth is the only legitimate playhouse holding a Gribble work, but two motion picture houses, the RKO-Boston, and the State, will be represented by this young man's handiwork. Mr. Gribble collaborated with Willard Mack in the story "Nana" which Samuel Goldwyn finally accepted for Anna Sten's debut in America, after half of Hollywood's writing men and women had failed to please. At the Boston, beginning Friday, "The Greenwich Village Follies," in tabloid form, with Yorke and King in their familiar musical comedy guise as old-fashioned tin-types, will arouse memories in Mr. Gribble's mind of the days when famous old revue names were to be found only on the marquees of legitimate theaters.

Harry W. Gribble

After John Murray Anderson launched "The Greenwich Village Follies" uptown in New York, Harry Wagstaff Gribble became one of the most reliable contributors to the annual series.

Actor, author, director and producer, Harry Gribble approaches Noel Coward in versatility, and his classic "March Hares" will live as long as anything Coward has written, with the exception of "Cavalcade." Fifteen years have passed since the young Gribble wrote "The Outrageous Mrs. Palmer" for Mary Young at the Castle Square Theater. His entire apprenticeship in the theater was served in Boston, and renewing a producing career which had a highlight with his daring invasion of Hoboken with the Morley-Throckmorton-Gribble series of revivals, the author of "The Perfumed Lady" has decided that Boston will see his shows first.

Brian Donlevy, Marjorie Peterson, Helen Brooks, Cari Johann, and Louise Jean Heydt are in the cast.

"Dangerous Corner", with Herbert Rawlinson and Beverly Bayne will continue an expected lengthy engagement at the Hollis Street Theater. A week from Monday, one of the most important premieres of the year is listed for the Boston Opera House. Mme. Marie Jeritza in "Annina," with a score by Rudolph Friml, is the attraction.

Comedy Is Her Forte

Three Stars on the Stage at RKO Boston

By HARRIS MORGAN

Gregory Ratoff enlivens the RKO Keith Boston boards currently; and being the expert comedian he is, and having the old-timers' knack of captivating audiences, he could easily have been left to stand alone as headline material. Yet on the same bill one finds Meyer Davis the maestro (himself) and his band; and, again, Etta Moten, known as the "Carioca Girl" from her work in the film, "Flying Down to Rio."

It's about the best and most lavish program this theater has staged to date. For Ratoff furnished plenty of heartily enjoyable comedy; the band, the music, and Miss Moten, excellent singing. There are other good acts, too, by no means to be regarded as lost in the shuffle around so much top-notch talent.

Meyer Davis

Ratoff gets a great "hand," and after that he has audience rocking with laughter, throughout his comedy sketch. Even to prove he is not only a stellar clown, he responds to calls by coming to the footlights and delivering an unforgettable talk, in which he mingles chatter, wisdom and humor.

Meyer Davis stirs enthusiasm on his own behalf. Being one of the best known of the batoniers, he proceeds to live up to his reputation; there are songs to interlard some of the best orchestral selections heard hereabouts.

"I believed in You", on screen, is comedy romance, with John Boles and Victor Jory making a play for the affections of Rosemary Ames. I found it very pleasing in a light way; and I liked Gertrude Michael as much more than I did Miss Ames, who makes her screen bow in this picture.

The plot has to do with activities in Greenwich Village, where the heroine slaps Boles because she slurred the Bohemian group of which she was a member. Jory is a labor agitator high at the moment, in the girl's favor. But the smack excited the Boles desire for closer acquaintance and he pursues the lassie until in the end he wins her away from Jory.

But it is the stage that has the greater delightment, for Ratoff, and Davis and his band, and Miss Moten, it is one of the season's very best.

Goldwyn Faith Is Justified by Actress

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ

Upon quite a notable high tide of interest Miss Anna Sten swept into the ken of "Hollywood film" fans here yesterday. The premiere of her first American venture, "Nana," proved an outstanding event for Loew's State Theater. On behalf of the star it may be lettered in gold that she is a worthwhile addition to our West Coast studios. And on behalf of Samuel Goldwyn it may be stated that the young lady's gifts and performance fully justify his faith in her, and his spending of a vast fortune in building on the basis of his own belief in his judgment and his "find."

Just around the corner from the State this writer had, several seasons back, seen Miss Sten in two German films. One was "Tempest" (opposite the great Jannings). The other was "The Brothers Karamazov" (the latter an even greater film than the other). In both Miss Sten captured the eye, held the attention, intrigued the hope to see more of her. The Russian girl had striking ability; her good looks were easy upon the eye and she had, perfectly, what has come to be known as "screen fire."

Now comes "Nana." It is the test of herself under (to her) alien conditions. She meets it—perfectly. It is the test of the wisdom, or folly, of investing the amazing sum, say, of around a million dollars, "sight unseen," so far as this NRA public goes. That test, too, she meets, and with equal decisiveness. She repays the Goldwyn faith, with interest.

Naturally, since Anna Sten has become the talk of a nation, this review goes off the beaten track of the usual routine. The personality commands attention, away above the vehicle. For the artistry in this lass from the Ukraine far outweighs her film; the dominance is hers, not the movie's.

Producer Goldwyn has been magnificently lavish at every hand. For the most part the choice of players is superb. But the chief weaknesses have been in direction and dialoguing, and the casting for the male juvenile lead. Dorothy Arzner, the director, has been analogously sympathetic so far as Miss Sten goes, but is unsympathetic of the dramatic thread and the camera necessities. The result is regrettable staginess, stiffness of dialogue and pace.

The speech is too often theatric and pompous in the old-fashioned way of long-ago acting. And Phillips Holmes should never have been chosen to play opposite the truly glamorous Anna; he is artificial is he that he robs one of her best scenes (in climacteric position, too!) of the conviction which the actress tries to clinch with all the power of her undoubted art.

So much for flaws. Thanks be, they are more than offset by the contributions of Miss Sten, of Richard Bennett as the impresario; of Reginald Owen and Lawrence Grant completely hid in their roles (identify them if you can!) of confidential man, and grand duke, respectively; of Lionel Atwill, as the love-hating colonel who succumbs to a kiss; and Mae Clarke and Muriel Kirkland, as a couple of cocottes, pals of Nana.

Above them all, above surrounding excellencies, above frailties of plot and talk and direction, rises Anna Sten. Not since the name Goldwyn brought over Vilma Banky has more beautiful womanhood been added to our screen. More, Miss Sten has the inner fire, ability to pantomime, and a face that is plastic to the touch from within, wondrously expressive.

Her voice makes me think of Dietrich's. Just as she acts with restraint, she so handles that voice of hers. She needs a further test—trite, high-sounding, unnatural dialogue, from her lips takes on emotional values. Thus, she can shade her voice as expertly as she shades her acting. Best tributes of all to her is, that she breathes life into even an outdated story.

Talented

Beverly Bayne in "Dangerous Corner," starting its second week Monday at the Hollis.

Magic Miriam Hopkins Met Stage Hit

Miriam Hopkins brings a rare blend of charm and talent to the Metropolitan's stage. For reception yesterday she received applause to give film fans here their first sight of her. Later, she richly rewarded a throng that made the house look like Mary Pickford week. For her acting was of the high level of her screen efforts that had endeared her to this same public.

The vehicle chosen by the eminent lady was an adaptation of Schnitzler's "Affairs of Anatole." It was an excellent choice; for it gave the actress full opportunity for that lighter mood in which she is mistress among comediennes. Anatole is laying a last spread to mark his farewell to her as his "weakness"; and in she comes to "steal" the show, and tell him a few things. Incidentally, to run the gamut of gay emotion, sober and slightly inebriate.

It was the gayest sketch this writer has caught on a variety stage in years. Miss Hopkins was about perfect, and a keenly interested audience, plus many punctuating laughs, bore witness to her superior art. But one other thing was very striking. In this mammoth theater, where nearly all voices have trouble, Miss Hopkins' tones came through, clear and wondrously inflected.

"Bolero," enjoying abundant advance attention, is the screen feature. George Raft, as the hero, starts an upgrade from hoofer to gigolo, then to real dance stardom. On the night the World War breaks, he is in the middle of the bolero, to the strains of Ravel's haunting music. Being cast as a Belgian, he enlists, receiving injuries from which he later dies when war is over and he has achieved his life ambition of staging that dance, once, in his own lavish way.

Being himself a product of the dance, Raft should have found the role tailor-made; yet he is not always convincing, nor is the conceit, a vital part of the hood been added to our screen. More, Miss Sten has the inner fire, ability to pantomime, and a face that is plastic to the touch from within, wondrously expressive.

Her voice makes me think of Dietrich's. Just as she acts with restraint, she so handles that voice of hers. She needs a further test—trite, high-sounding, unnatural dialogue, from her lips takes on emotional values. Thus, she can shade her voice as expertly as she shades her acting. Best tributes of all to her is, that she breathes life into even an outdated story.

'Moulin Rouge' at Orpheum

With Constance Bennett at her best in "Moulin Rouge," and Professor Lamberti headlining the vaudeville, Loew's Orpheum has a show of unusual entertainment value this week. Miss Bennett is seen for the first time in a dual role as a stagestruck wife and fascinating French musical comedy star.

Prof. Lamberti presents several unusual offerings on the xylophone. In addition to providing fun galore with his comical activities, Jans & Lynton Kaw with a comedy, singing and dancing review that was well received. Charles Forsythe and Addie Seamon, extremely popular with Boston fans, were royally received and accorded a big ovation.

Others on the bill are Snoozer, Jr., who captivated with his tricks and intelligence, Land and Lee in a comedy skit, "Locked Out," and Osaki and Taki in an Oriental balancing act.

Albert's Memory Will Live Forever--Dr. Kinsolving

By ARTHUR LEE KINSOLVING
Rector of Trinity Church

Years ago in New York city, you might have encountered a young reporter on a newspaper without knowing that he was destined to be a king and a world hero, because at that time he did not know it himself. A nobleman, but not the heir apparent, he sought to prepare for whatever responsibilities might come by learning to know, to appreciate, to love and to serve the pepole. Albert thus showed himself the true type of aristocrat, whose life was prompted by "noblesse oblige." In his character and value he was kingly. And history gave him his chance, as history more than often does to those who are ready and worthy.

In the crisis of history, Albert more than measured up. Embracing for himself the way of courage and inevitable sacrifice, he committed his people, in that memorable letter to the Kaiser to the desperate heroic course which won for Belgium a new dignity in history. It is only the great souls who can lead others to choose sacrifice. And the reason is that others know the leader asks nothing of them that he does not first exact of himself.

Albert was a Christian king; he had not to stand alone, but shoulder to shoulder with another of the immortals, his spiritual preceptor, Cardinal Mercier. Albert and Mercier wrested from the envious hell of war all of nobility that might be distilled from valiant goodness. These two leave a memory that youth will hail a thousand years from now.

Albert's body lies in its tomb—that great body, which a greater spirit made its emblem and servant. The body was crushed before its time, yet it was a fitting way for Albert to die. It fulfills the motto on a monument erected at the base of the Matterhorn in memory of a lad who tried in vain to scale its challenging heights: "He died climbing."

The body of Albert is left behind for grateful subjects to mourn over, but not the spirit of the man. The name of Albert will climb the centuries as long as history runs to prompt mankind to choose the noblest course. And the spirit of Albert climbs the heights of heaven to see face to face the One in whom he found the supreme example of what it is to be a King. And as Albert entered the company of heaven, "I know the other guests arose and stood."

Winter is here. You'd better replenish your fuel supply before a cold snap catches you unaware. The dealers listed daily in the Coal-Coke-Oil columns of the American and Advertiser are ready to give you immediate delivery at reasonable prices.

LISTEN WORLD! Can Women Take It?

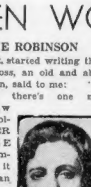
By ELSIE ROBINSON

When I first started writing this column, my boss, an old and able newspaper man, said to me:

"Remember, there's one unbreakable law in writing a column — NEVER CRITICIZE WOMEN! Woman can't take it like men. A man doesn't care what anyone says about his sex in general. Sometimes he'll be interested and write in, and put up a good argument. But he'll always be a good sport about it.



Elsie Robinson

"BUT WHATEVER ELSE THEY MAY BE, WOMEN ARE NEVER GOOD SPORTS ABOUT CRITICISM.

"If you criticize the feminine sex in an editorial, each individual woman will take it as an insult and proceed to act upon it. She won't act as a man would, either. She won't write in frankly and challenge your statements. SHE'LL GET EVEN WITH YOU.

"She'll bombard you, and get her friends to bombard you, with anonymous letters. Or she'll make her husband write in and say he'll cancel his subscription unless you're fired. And if she's a clubwoman, you can prepare for real trouble. For she'll get her club to pass a resolution condemning not only you, but your paper.

"There's nothing that editors dread as much as clubwomen. And that isn't just because women's clubs have power. Men's clubs have power, too. But you know how men's clubs are going to use their power. They follow certain sporting rules.

"But you can never count on women's clubs. They do the most amazing things.

"IF WOMEN THINK THEY'RE IN THE RIGHT—AND SHOW ME THE WOMAN WHO DOESN'T THINK SHE'S IN THE RIGHT—THEY'RE ABSOLUTELY UNSCRUPULOUS ABOUT GETTING THEIR WAY. THEY'LL STOP AT NOTHING.

"So, whatever you do, never criticize women. Particularly, mothers and clubwomen. You may think they're public nuisances. You may have proof that they're getting by with murder. But keep it to yourself, and hand out the good old baloney—or they'll get your scalp."

Haven't I seen proof of these statements, over and over? Yes, I must admit I have.

Have I ever yet published an article criticizing women that didn't have a mean, petty, unfair comeback? No, I haven't.

AND YET, I STILL BELIEVE IN WOMEN. I STILL BELIEVE THEY CAN LISTEN TO THE TRUTH AND TAKE IT LIKE GAME SPORTS. AND AGAINST ALL HAZARDS, I SAY WHAT I THINK ABOUT US GIRLS—MYSELF INCLUDED—AND I THINK PLENTY!

What happens? Exactly what my editor prophesied happens. Every tantrum, every hysterical protest, every stab-in-the-dark comes off, just as specified.

BUT SOMETHING HE DIDN'T PROPHESY ALSO HAPPENS.

FOR EVERY NINE WOMEN WHO CAN'T TAKE IT LIKE GAME SPORTS, THERE IS ONE WHO CAN. AND THAT ONE IS WORTH ALL THE WORK AND WORRY!

So, I'm continuing to write for women. And though my editors yell their heads off, I'm going to write the truth for and about women.

Art Exhibit by Children

On Wednesday, Feb. 28, at 3:30, in the Junior League ballroom, there is to be a motion picture entitled, "Dry Point," showing Frank Benson and others. This picture is being put on in conjunction with an interesting exhibition by the children of the Art Center, which is a small museum on Rutland st., where beautiful exhibitions are held and where children are given free instruction in drawing, painting and sculpture. Tea will be served and all members are invited and may obtain tickets for guests.

A group of league members, headed by Mrs. B. Devereux Barker, Jr., have formed a committee which is taking an interest in the Children's Art Center and which is working for the success of this entertainment. Those assisting Mrs. Barker are Mrs. Charles L. Hibbard, Jr., Louise Baldwin, Mrs. Alexander Ladd, Mrs. Willis P. Real, Aline Kilham, Mary Allerton Cushman, Peggy Barton, Jeannie Dupee, Elizabeth Swift, Mrs. Albert Rice, Miss Elisa Bowditch, and Mrs. John E. Yerxa. This committee is a new branch of the arts and interests of the league.

Trouble Ahead for Eugene O'Neill

—By G. K. Chesterton—

LONDON—Of all the very interesting news that comes from America to Europe, even during this intensely interesting period of what is at least a virile and adventurous presidency, I find that nothing has interested Europe more than the news of the last play by that American man of genius, Eugene O'Neill.

I say "interested Europe," partly because I have passed a great part of my life in pointing out that England happens to be a part of Europe. I have maintained it with some energy lately against Lord Beaverbrook, who is under the impression that England is a part of Canada. But I do not think that many Americans suffer from this curious illusion. Indeed, even the most extreme British Imperialist can be brought to agree, after a careful measurement of the map and calculation of longitude, that the Atlantic Ocean is actually wider than the Straits of Dover.

And as I know, for a fact, that many people in France and Germany are watching with exactly the same interest as the English interest, the development of American ideas during the present crisis, I take the liberty of saying that Europe, not to mention England, is very much connected with this turn in the career of a brilliant American writer. There will be any number of people in Europe, as there will doubtless be any number of people in America, to call it a change for the worse. I am not now even discussing whether it is a change for the worse. I am only remarking that it is a very interesting and very typical modern change.

EUGENE O'NEILL, apart from many other talents and twists and turns of imagination, has hitherto been the finest expression of a modern mood, which is in fact a primitive and almost prehistoric mood. He often appealed to the fact that men are all primitive men. Not only the author; not only the actor; but quite equally the audience is made up of primitive men; why should we not be primitive, for we were only born a little while ago? One of his plays is dominated by the dreadful savage drum called the Tom-Tom, which it is perhaps hard to imagine in Uncle Tom's Cabin.

Now the special trouble with modern philosophy has been that it is either prehistoric or post-historic. It is either concerned with the past of which we know very little, or else with the future of which we know nothing at all. In both these directions men of genius might go as far as they choose, and only be called daring and revolutionary. They can paint what portraits of the Missing Link they like; or they can paint what landscapes of the future Utopia they like. The danger for the modern man of genius is that between these things lies something rather large; the real history of humanity. When he happens to hit that, or stumble over it, he will get into trouble.

I am sure Mr. Eugene O'Neill will get into trouble. It is amusing to think that an American genius so utterly different as Mr. T. S. Eliot has also got into trouble. This trouble always comes, when they leave off bothering about barbaric memories or prophetic visions; and try to grapple with the historic creed that created their own civilization.

In his last play, Mr. O'Neill has faced the fact of the survival of the Christian idea; and the world is full of wild, daring, desperate, defiant, all-denying sceptics who have not the courage to face it.

A Number of Things

—By Charles H. Towne—

IN a charming book that has been out many years now, Enjoyment of Poetry, Max Eastman told me that when a crowd of people stepped upon a ferryboat, most of them, no matter what the weather, would go within; others, a mere handful, would seek the deck. These latter were the poets—not literally writers of verse, but people of imagination and feeling, who instinctively sought the brighter way.

I was thinking about that the other day when several of us had occasion to go to the top floor of a skyscraper. When we entered the large, airy office for our conference, one lady stepped immediately, business or no business to the magic casement that opened not on the foam, but upon a sea of roofs. She stood there for some moments, apparently in deep meditation, while the others took their places in the center of the room, around a huge table. The lady was an old New Yorker, but the panorama of our city never failed to thrill her.

"You've seen that view more often than I can remember," her husband finally said, a bit impatient at the delay she was causing the rest of us.

She did not answer. She was spellbound. At last she turned to us with a happy sigh.

"It's a privilege to live in this town," she said, as she took her place, and soon lost herself in the prosaic business which had brought us here. Later, when some detail came up, which was not understood by her husband, she was quick to grasp its significance. And if there is any moral to this, it is that poets are far more practical than the world gives them credit for.

I strolled down Long Island some years ago with a man on one of the loveliest summer days I have ever known. We had seen all sorts of things on our way from the city to the open country. I had paused to draw his attention to the stark walls that rose behind us as we left Queensboro' Bridge, but he merely nodded, and looked ahead at the hideous gasometers that confronted us in Long Island City. "It's there we're going," he said, rather peevishly. "We look back, like Lot's wife? We might turn into pillars of salt."

And so it was all the rest of our tramp, which lasted four or five days. He never wished to pause.

When evening came, he would go to his room directly after dinner, and smile tolerantly when I told him I was off for a night stroll. He lost the perfumed darkness of those little side roads that led I knew not where, and were all the more enchanting because of that. He missed the starlit heavens, and the moon coming up like a golden bubble to hang over a rosebush.

He thought I was a little mad, and told me so. But he never knew what I thought of him.

Letters I Would Love to Mail

—J. P. McEvoy—

Hollywood, Cal.,
Feb. 24, 1934

ANY MATCH COMPANY,
Anywhere.

Gentlemen: You know all about matches. At least, you think you do. So I want you to tell me something. Nothing about the way matches are made or sold or distributed. Nothing about the secret formula by which you make match heads that come off in the air when you strike them, or the kind that burst into a loud smell and then lay down a smoke screen.

I don't even want to know how you got on to the notion of paper matches that bend when you strike them and strike when you bend them. These must be family secrets, and I have never met your family.

I don't want to know who invented the match that is shaped like a little man and comes ten in a package and burns your fingers when you light it.

I am not interested in the wax-covered tapers that come in snap-top boxes in France and Italy, or that hideosity sold in ye little arte nookes with matches three feet long looking for all the world like something out of Alice in Wonderland. Or the match guaranteed not to go out in a wind—but the guarantee does not extend to the unfortunate who tries to hold it and breathe at the same time.

MY problem is much simpler. I am sure the solution is even more so, but I can't find it. The big brains in your great industry should have no trouble with it, once you let the fierce white light of your intelligence play on it—but when? That is what I want to know. When are you going to stop inventing new kinds and shapes of matches, and solve the simple problem of every household in the world.

And that is, in short: A match container which be put on an end table near an ash tray, and which will ALWAYS have at least one match in it. It needn't be full all the time, or even half full. Just one match.

Now that isn't asking a lot, is it? And yet we as a civilized people are as far away from this goal as ever in our history. Farther, I would say. When we lived in caves there was always a fire going and a handy coal to light Pappy's pipe.

Now what has Pappy got? A radiator. Did you ever try to light your pipe on a radiator? And what else? Chromium match holders, crystal match holders, ebony match holders, and just plain match holders—but matches? Where are they?

IRE-ECHO the wails that go around the world a million times a minute: Where do all the matches go? Why the devil can I never find a match in this house? Who's got a match? Where's that box of matches I put here a minute ago?

There ar. a million of us. There was a million and one. But he couldn't take it. He was in the match business. He finally controlled the match business. He owned practically all the matches in the world. And when he wanted to smoke he could never find a match. One day, after looking all over the apartment for a match, he gave up.

"It's no use," he said, "I cannot go on like this."

So he killed himself.

This story, told for the first time, was suppressed by the great Match industry. It would not do for the world to know the real reason for the death of Ivar Kreuger

Sincerely,
J. M. McEVOY.

Don't Write, Wire; or, Oliver Ames and the Poets

By Phyllis McGinley

OLIVER Ames is a gentleman of Qualities wise and witty.
And Oliver Ames, my own true love,
Has journeyed to Salt Lake City,
Whence each day (as I swore he'd better)
He sends me a lyrically worded letter
That throbs with ardor and pulses with passion
In somewhat the following fervent fashion:

DARLING, I'VE just
A minute or two,
But I simply must
Get off to you
A dutiful note as I said I would.
I haven't been feeling so very good.
The boys, here, threw me a little revel
And my head aches now like the very devil.
The weather is fine and I wish you were Here. Love,

Hastily,
Oliver.

FOR Oliver Ames, my all-in-all,
Clever at How and When To,
Is hardly ever poetical
In letters he puts his pen to.
So, disappointed, taking it hard,
I hurried down with a library card
To feast my mind on the missives planned
By poets, taking their quills in hand.
And among my betters
I sought my wish.
I conned the letters
Of Percy Bysshe.
I peeped at Poe in the common mail,
And Johnson writing to Mrs. Thrale.
Thackeray, Longfellow, Bobbie Burns—
All the gentlemen served their turns.
I stripped the veil from the private lives
Of bards addressing their loves and wives.
And these are the amorous works of art
At whose old sweetness I fed my heart!

Dearest Mary,
So Shelley wrote,
I've time for the very
Briefest note.
But I am well and I hope you're so.

P. Shelley.

Ah, Hail, Blithe Spirit!
That's what you said, or something near it.

AND Robert Burns when he wrote his dear
Railed at too many mugs of beer.
For the boys had given a little revel
And his head ached then like the very devil.
Boswell cried how his horse was winner,
Thackeray ardently hymned his dinner,
And Dr. Johnson with classic phrase
Sighed of nostrums that filled his days.
He spoke of pains in his arms and back
And listed the virtues of ipecac.

FOR Oliver Ames, my bosom's staff,
Whenever it's his ambition
To put out a palpitant paragraph,
Falls heir to a great tradition.
The hands are wrung and the lips are bitten
But the sentiment never gets really written.
And he and Shelley and all the others
Under the skin, in this, are brothers.

Vagabondia

—By Bruno Lessing—

PERUGIA—Terni, Spoleto, Assisi and Perugia. An enchanting ride through the heart of Umbria to this, the queen of the hill towns. My only regret is that it was an enjoyment difficult to impart through the written word. There were moments when I wished that I had everybody whom I knew with me so that they could all get the spirit of it for themselves. But, had that been possible, I'm sure all those people would have said to all whom they knew: "I wish you had seen it all for yourself."

A perfect day. A perfect road. The charm of hilly scenery. And an endless succession of surprises in tiny villages upon the summits of apparently unclimbable hills, ruined castles and watch towers, fertile fields studded with evidences of the ancient Romans, such as a broken sign-post with Latin lettering, the solitary column of a temple or the fragment of a wall or aqueduct and, every little while, a mound or clump of stones half-covered with vegetation, suggesting a monument or place of worship erected by the Etruscans themselves or even some race that preceded them.

WHEN you speak of the Etruscans you go back about three thousand years. Tonight Cavaliere Giulo Curti, who runs the Brufani Hotel in Perugia, told me about a discovery in Gubbio, a little village near here, of twelve bronze tablets bearing inscriptions in a language that the archeologists have not yet been able to decipher. Which gave me quite a thrill. When people carve letters in bronze it shows that they have a language and are able to write. When people have a language and are able to write it suggests that they have thoughts. (Although some cynic may turn up his nose at this.) And when that language, discovered in this locality, is not Italian or Latin or Etruscan, it raises the question: "Were there a civilized people here even before the Euscans?" In which case you might be going back eight thousand years.

There are several hundred ways of describing the hill towns of Umbia. Spoleto, Assisi and Perugia are splendid examples. You can tell what impressions they make on you as you see them from a distance. You can tell how you like them up as you walk or ride through them. And you can depict them after you have stayed in them for a while.

BUT Spoleto is famous for the truffles which are found under the oak trees around its walls. A truffle has nothing whatever to do with history. It is a bit of epicurean delicacies, the same today as it was a thousand years ago and as it will be when the dollar gets back to normal.

In the spring, when the truffles root them out of the earth and the lucky farmers bring them to market to sell by the ounce (or, maybe, like diamonds, by the carat), the air is full of their fragrance.

AND Assisi is famous as the birthplace of St. Francis, the founder of the Franciscan order. One of the most interesting characters in the story of the Roman church. A handsome, healthy, charming lad, of world-wide heritage, popular and laughter-loving, who suddenly became imbued with a powerful desire to make the poor and his wretched things. So strong was that desire that, without a moment's hesitation, he flung himself into religious work and devoted his life to it.

The Washington SIDE SHOW

(Copyright, 1934, Universal Service, Inc.)

Washington, Feb. 24—The White House fence runs in thin cold rains and the sidewalks along Pennsylvania ave. sag with slippery slush.

Around the foyer a bird dog sniffs and bays, and in the press room the quartet sings of unrequited love with a counterfeit heartbreak.

It is a calm, busy place, the mansion where President Roosevelt lives and works. It was suddenly transformed the day Roosevelt came into the executive office.

Every noon in the Harding and Coolidge administrations and in the beginning of the Hoover era, a line of tourists curled out onto the veranda to parade past the President in a shake-the-hand-that-shook-the-hand rite.

Chirp for President

It's all ended now. President Roosevelt has no time for the handshake parade. But the quartet in the press room sings its rag-time roundelays without any one objecting. The President frequently has the boys chirp "Home on the Range" for him when the day is done.

Marvin H. McIntyre, one of the President's secretaries, plays hookey from dignity to contribute a grumbly baritone to the only five-man quartet in the world, or at least in the White House.

The other day the quartet needed a bass. They were informed that William H. Moran, chief of the U. S. Secret Service and first string bass, was busy. They called him, and ordered him to the press room on business.

Mr. Moran came, and the corridors hummed with the sad, choppy rhythm of "I Wonder What's Become of Sally."

The ladies of the Senate have a hot lunch every Tuesday in a colorless room at the Capitol, made interesting by their presence... Mrs. Clarence C. Dill, wife of the Senator from Washington is the president of this society... she wrote the preface to the Congressional Cook Book, a compilation of recipes from wives of Senators, Congressmen, wives of cabinet officers and wives of diplomats... but, it's always a cold luncheon brought from home by the ladies themselves...During the war it was the custom to sew before luncheon...Now a half dozen or so of them do a little Red Cross sewing before the luncheon.

G. O. P. Active

Bruised and battered is the G. O. P. elephant, but even now it is beginning to show signs of recuperation, looking forward to November 1936.

Within the national committee, activity is beginning to stir once more in the matter of a national chairman to succeed Everett Sanders. Not that it means much, because the presidential candidate selects the chairman of a national convention when the time arrives. However, it's a sign of life.

Former Senator Jim Watson, of Indiana, who long has coveted the job, is wanting it harder than ever and trying to do something about it. Ex-Senator - Ex-Governor - Ex-Ambassador Walter Edge, of New Jersey, is doing no little pining in that direction.

Sanders has long failed to function, due to ill health. The G. O. P. finds it extremely difficult to get an important party chief to take the job—except for Watson and Edge.

Meanwhile, on Capitol Hill, Republican forces are distinctly taking heart. Two months ago every trial balloon they sent up got whisked away in a hurricane of pro-Democratic public opinions. But now, things are a little different.

The Republicans are filling the Congressional Record with open complaints against the NRA, PWA, CWA, AAA and other administration projects.

Cabinet Wives

Mrs. Farley—dresses excellently . . . most of her friends are in New York and she passes much time there . . . as indefatigable as Mrs. Roosevelt . . . frank, and looks you in the eye . . . stands with her hands on her hips . . . not unlike her husband, smiling Jim, in personality.

Mrs. Swanson: Very social and equally sociable . . . Erstwhile Virginia beauty of considerable fame . . . Not so very erstwhile, at that . . . Small and slim, with a figure that many a 17-year-old girl would like to boast . . . Her sister was the first Mrs. Swanson . . . Married the present navy secretary several years after her sister died . . . Likes partying and knows how to handle a dinner conversation . . . As such has been of considerable help to the political aspirations of her able husband.

Just Jottings

Huey Long spent most of his working day in the Senate showing colleagues his book, "Every Man His Own King." Huey's name is on the book cover twice. He always has a copy on his desk.

Mrs. Hattie Caraway, the lady senator from Arkansas, is the only member of the Senate allowed on the floor with a hat on.

All the wild rumors start in the Occidental restaurant, where the well-known fans eat lunch and dinner. The walls are covered with the autographed snapshots of every one from President Roosevelt to the newest page boy.

The hill leading to the capitol was iceoated. So the smarties just covered it with sand to prevent slipping. Came a thaw, and it is now a cross between the dismal swamp and no man's land, after a washout.

Contract Bridge Technique

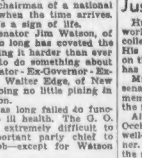
By JOSEPHINE CULBERTSON

"You write so much, Mrs. Culbertson, about the fine plays such as squeezes and coups and forced leads that I wonder if you have time for some of the problems which confront a poor player like myself."

This is an extract from a letter I received the other day, and I assume there are a few others who share the writer's feelings. Bridge writers like to discuss the more complicated problems that arise at the bridge table and forget that the majority of those who read about bridge have not developed their game to a point where they can master the more intricate type of problem. However, experts, as well as inexperts, often go wrong on such a simple problem as planning the play of the hand.

In a recent rubber game at Crockford's Club, New York, I saw a really fine player go wrong on the play of a hand which was in its essence simplicity itself.

East, dealer.
East and West vulnerable.
North and South, part-score 70.



The bidding:

| East | South | West | North |
|---|---|---|---|
| Pass | | | |

West's Opening lead was a small diamond, and East won the trick with the Ace. East then led the nine of spades. South won with the Ace, and in the subsequent play failed to make the contract to take seven tricks. The question is: How should he have planned the play to fulfill the contract? Even conceding that West held four spades originally, the successful plan is a comparatively simple one. After winning the first spade trick, South should lay down a heart—either the Ace or small—and should continue with another round, removing the last heart from Dummy. Now whatever lead is made, a losing heart must be ruffed, provided, of course, there are at least three hearts in the hand of each opponent, and the Declarer will be enabled to enter Dummy for the discard of one losing club on the diamond Queen.

Thus played, regardless of the success of the club finesse, South should make four trumps, including the ruff of a heart, the Ace of hearts, the Queen of diamonds and the club Ace.

In actual play South continued with a second round of trumps, found that West held four, and then was never able to obtain a ruff of his losing heart as West, in the lead on the second round of hearts, drew Dummy's last trump and thereby defeated the contract.

This scene was snapped on the day after Christmas—and what a Christmas present kind old Santa Claus for the railroad. (Supplied by D. Green, 92 Wayland st., Dorchester.)

NO NEED TO ENVY BEAUTIES' MILK BATHS -:- SHOES ARE NOT LEFT OUT OF ENSEMBLE

New Milk-and-Egg Pack Is Easy to Mix and Wages War on Blackheads

(Posed by Anna Sten.)

By Carol Ames

GOOD NEWS FOR YOU perfume hounds!

A brand new perfume has just arrived in Boston. It's a delightfully elusive bouquet odor which reminds me of a picturesque old-fashioned garden at dawn . . . and I've found that the fragrance lingers on for hours and hours.

Supremely modern yet romantic, this newest of new exciting scent is a cheerful, gladsome perfume for gay occasions . . . full of the promise of gentle laughter and joyous, carefree days. I've tried so many perfumes I pride myself on becoming quite a connoisseur of them, but I like this latest arrival so well I find it difficult to use it as sparingly as perfume should be applied.

Feeling that we women are somewhat satiated with romantic names for perfumes—as though the odor didn't mean more than the label—the manufacturer has given it a simple but appropriate name which I'm surprised some other perfume manufacturer wracking his poor brains for a name hasn't adopted before!

Have you ever used a milk pack on your skin? Used one every week or ten days this unusual new treatment will work marvels in helping to rid the skin of ugly little blackheads and close all the enlarged pores so detrimental to real complexion beauty.

One such pack on the market—the only one of its kind I've ever come across, incidentally—consists of powdered skim milk and egg albumen which, mixed together with the fragrant liquid pack solution in the same package, makes a sort of creamy white paste.

There's enough in one set for ten to twelve weekly treatments. The white powder and pack solution come complete with a cute little spoon for mixing. A grand treatment for use at home to refresh the skin, banish blackheads and whiteheads, and reduce enlarged pores.

No doubt you've all heard of the famous French actress who attributed her lovely skin to the milk baths she claimed to take daily. They must have been luxurious (slightly sticky, too, to our way of thinking), and decidedly expensive. No woman nowadays would dream of going to all that bother and expense—and why should she, when it's possible to use a ready-prepared milk facial pack?

Wouldn't you like to know the names of the new perfume and the refreshing milk pack, and where they may be found in Boston? Just telephone Carol Ames, Boston Evening American (LIB. 4000). Or if you prefer writing, send along a stamped, self-addressed envelope for a personal reply.

Daily Suggestion for Self-Improvement

Emphasizing words unnecessarily is a bad habit which grates on the ear. It's almost as unpleasant as a voice which drones along monotonously on the same key.

WANT TO LOOK YOUNG?

The secret of keeping young is to feel young—to do this you must watch your liver and bowels — there's no need of having a sallow complexion—dark rings under your eyes — pimples—a bilious look in your face—dull eyes with no sparkle. Your doctor will tell you ninety per cent of all sickness comes from inactive bowels and liver.

Dr. Edwards, a well-known physician in Ohio, perfected a vegetable compound as a substitute for calomel to act on the liver and bowels, which he gave to his patients for years.

Dr. Edwards Olive Tablets are gentle in their action yet always effective. They help bring about that natural buoyancy which all should enjoy by toning up the liver and clearing the system of impurities.

Dr. Edwards Olive Tablets are known by their olive color. 15c, 30c, 60c.

A New Way to Apply Lip Rouge

Beauty Questions

Question: I can't seem to make my lipstick behave. It has the perverse habit of spreading over the white skin surface surrounding my mouth. Can you offer any suggestions? — M. C., South Boston.

Answer: Try plunging an orange-wood stick into the rouge, and pencil an outline of your lips, keeping carefully within the restricted district. That's a tip which comes directly from Hollywood. Many of the movie stars have found this trick helpful in applying either lipstick or cream rouge to the lips.

Slimming Calves

Question: I'm not overweight, but the calves of my legs are too plump. How can I make them slimmer? I'd appreciate your help a lot, as I'm very ashamed of the size of my legs.—Mrs. D. R., Cambridge.

Answer: Plump legs look best when encased in dark colored hosiery. Gunmetal is one nice color. You can peel off the excess fat by exercise. Here's one good stunt: Lie flat on your back on the floor or bed, and lifting your legs pretend to pedal a bicycle. Keep your hands under your hips to steady your body, and do the exercise vigorously for a few minutes every day.

Collar Bones

Question: I am what's called "pleasingly plump," but I have prominent collar bones. Can you advise me how to go about making them seem less prominent? —S. J. T., Milton.

Answer: Prominent collar bones can be made to do a disappearing act. Stand erect, and inflating your chest, stretch as tall as though you were trying to pull your body apart from your waist. Stretch your arms back as far as possible, and then relax and let your arms settle down naturally at your sides.

Hangnails

Question: I have rather painful hangnails. How can I get rid of them? I'll appreciate your giving me some of your sensible advice.—L. V., Lowell.

Answer: Before trying to clip away hangnails, soak your finger tips in warm, soapy water, and scrub the cuticle around your nails with a small hand brush. Dry your hands, and apply cuticle oil or olive oil to soften the cuticle further before snipping away the ragged cuticle with small manicure scissors.

SOME CALL perching on high, hard stools and leaning against slippery brass bars, even though in the heart of their own home, indifferent comfort for enjoying cocktails. So in the interests of lounging picturesquely while you sip something, we offer the cocktail hassock. We defy even Grandmother not to unconsciously assume a school girl air when she sits down on one and hugs her knees. Great atmosphere. Or trail languidly as does the model, who incidentally shows one of the smartest flowered satins in town. Now for the little secret—the unusual hassock is simply one with a clever slip-cover, so that if you move the cocktail paraphernalia to another room, yet another cover will put the hassock in the right mood, period, or whatever. There are modernistic and period covers, in all sorts of color schemes. The one shown is a versatile rough weave in natural color with the popular cotton brush fringe in vivid orange. The collarette is Chippendale, the cocktail glasses have bright stripes whizzing around. The rug is one of the modern all-over foliage designs. ## They Oblige in Copying Style Motifs

By Victoria Gaines

(Authentic last-minute fashions from New York—the style center of America.)

THIS "WINDBLOWN" WHIRLWIND that has struck Fashion like a cyclone has touched bottom at last.

Shoes are the latest fashion by this windblown business, in the shape of open-cut oxford ties with swirling decorations from heel to toe. But windblown modes are not the only ones to be reflected in spring footgear.

STREAMLINES

Streamline models, Cossack clothes and Tyrolean costumes all begin at the head and end at the foot these days. There's a shoe for every style, from a halo hat to a pleated hem. An opera pump pleats its tongue to match a pleated frill on a frock, an oxford tie reflects the bow-tie theme in its bow-trimmed vamp. You can be all-Mexican, all-Tyrolean or all-Russian from your head to your heels this season, with the aid of these spring shoes.

America's feet—feminine feet, of course—are stepping right out into the open this spring—almost out of their shoes altogether. Open cut-outs expose most of the foot to the spring breezes, in line with the open-air fad that started by sports shorts and backless bathing suits. Those barefoot sandals which were a strictly after-dinner fashion last season, now see the clock around in open-laced sports shoes, open-cut street shoes and—ever so discreetly—in open-toe afternoon slippers of the most formal genre.

CONTRASTING COLORS

For less daring souls, the wide-open spaces of spring shoes are modified to a few mild perforations—still an open-and-shut affair, but in a more modest manner. Perforations like these are particularly smart in various ornamental designs—triangles, circles, etc.—and become perfectly devastating when underlaid with leather of a contrasting color. Blue may be undercored by white or gray, brown by beige, and black by white or red. Whatever weird color combination your costume decides to display this spring, you're sure to find it in shoes as well.

Or as a last resort, you can always fall back on those perforated models which have nothing between them and the skin except a silk stocking—thus showing the stocking color under the perforations in perfect shoe-and-stocking harmony.

The Marry-Go-Round

By HELEN ROWLAND

Every now and then, somebody gets up on the platform and suggests the abolition of the ancient institution of marriage.

It is easy to understand why a MAN should want to "junk" the ties that bind. He has been told that Heaven is a place where there is no marrying or giving in marriage, and he sees before him a glamorous vision of eternal bachelorhood, eternal freedom and eternal romantic adventure.

Helen Rowland

But, when a WOMAN advocates junkin' matrimony, as has happened more than once, I feel like calling in a psychoanalyst and finding out what complex inspires her to ask her sex to throw away its last card and cut its own throat.

There is one consoling thought, however—and that is that so long as men are men and women are women you can't JUNK MARRIAGE. The human instinct to want and to seek a life-mate is as strong and indestructible as the human instinct to want and to seek a deity.

Why should anybody wish to abolish marriage, anyhow? Marriage, today, is not the old cast-iron "slavery" that it was in grandmother's time. It is free and flexible, and comes in so many assorted varieties and flavors that everybody can choose his or her own brand. It isn't poured into any one conventional mold.

You don't have to model your married life, these days, to please the Ladies' Aid Society. You can please YOURSELF. You can make marriage "straight" and old-fashioned and domestic, with children and domesticity and no problems—or you can take it modern, with separate jobs and separate studio apartments and separate amusements.

Tweed Accessories

AND MORE TWEEDS! A bag, belt and neckerchief of homespun tweed in yellow, beige and brown. The bag is perfectly huge and has a mouth that yawns beautifully — just the thing for the lady who needs a miniature suitcase for her belongings. The belt lies flat against one's tummy and the neckerchief adds the finishing touch.

Russian Food

Food is just as much influenced by fashions as clothes are, at the moment it's Russian. Here is a delicious recipe for Cottage Cream Cheese brought by Anna Sten from her home in Soviet Russia.

Rub a pound of fresh cottage cheese through a strainer, mix it with a cup of sugar and a cup of raisins, and put in a bowl or mould. Chill two cups of sour cream and whip it with a cup of sugar. Turn out the cheese and pour the cream over it. Sprinkle with cinnamon. Chill.

How to Use the New Dishes

By MRS. BEECKMAN

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

I. I won a 28-piece set of dishes at a recent party and I would like to know just what I should serve when using them. The set is of beautiful black onyx. It consists of six cups, six coasters, six small ash trays, six coasters, salt and pepper shakers, and the cream and sugar bowl.

2. What sort of glasses would you suggest getting for the coasters?

3. Would it be all right to serve sandwiches?

4. Is there a certain time of the day or evening when this set should be used? S.

1. This set, with the addition of some plates of tea-plate size or of slightly larger size, would, I think, be convenient to use when you are serving tea, or when you are having one table of bridge, or when you are having six people in for supper.

2. Against the black coasters white glasses would be the most effective, I think. And tumblers would probably fit best in the coasters.

3. Yes.

4. I am sure that you will find many occasions in the day or evening, to use this set when you are having a few guests.

Pandora Tells You

DEAR PANDORA:

A next-door neighbor is stealthily and surely taking all the peace and comfort out of my humble cot (two-by-four Pullman kitchenette apartment to you non-Irishers). What with jobs being what they are and friends being what they ain't, I'm discovering for myself that there's no place like home, particularly when the larder and bookcase are full of interesting material.

But can I enjoy these and those? No, Pandora, and all because of someone I don't even like or trust; a woman, who, on her own sayso, practically admits that she has made herself a nuisance wherever she's worked or lived or had her being. Now, I'm no angel, either, but I do try not to intrude where I'm not wanted and I am grown-up enough not to expect others to settle my problems for me. In fact, my good friends have frequently chided me for being too close-mouthed. Me, myself, Pandora, I'm beginning to think it's a virtue for which I should be sainted.

Where am I? I'm that distracted, Pandora, by this egomaniac too, too nearby that I seem to have completely lost my sense of direction. Anyway, as I said before, I'm getting terribly weary of her "I, me and my troubles" litany night after night again and I wish you'd tell me what'll I do about it. ELLEN.

DEAR ELLEN:

And what a big sap you've turned out to be! Now, let's have some sense, some old-fashioned gumption, Ellen. Your mother didn't raise you to be a human door-mat so stop being one this minute and you'll be free of this pe-skirted pest.

The instant you make the decision that you will NOT be further annoyed by this peace-destroyer you win. She'll realize you're on to her and she'll begin looking for some other sottie to tell her troubles to.

PANDORA.

SPRING HATS FOR WINTER COATS

By PRUNELLA WOOD

PERHAPS the most alluring of the new black hats is that model which has a swashbuckling, cavalier sweep to its off-the-face brim. The model sketched at the bottom of this group of wearable hats is such a one. It is a grand hat to jack up the rather utilitarian frock when it must go to tea in public, and in spite of its generous size effect, it is still a perfectly comfortable hat for tea dancing. (That interesting indoor sport has been revived since Repeal came back.)

The crisp attitudes and the luxurious swish of taffeta are details that accompany many new black hats. Sometimes it is a matching crop of silk, sometimes it is a bright contrasting plaid. Again it may be a delicate pastel in the Fragonard feeling that is used. It is all very windblown in effect, which is to say that the eyes have it for hats that employ this device.

COCKADES, those pin wheels and quills of plaited ribbon, are another great favorite for the all-black hat. White is used a lot, alone or combined with black ribbon; red and blue together or separately is another good choice, and it is by these means that a hat can be more surely than ever tied up to the frock with which it is worn.

Pippin and Kathleen Weigh Petting Party in Balance and Find It Wanting

WHAT HAS HAPPENED

Pretty Pippin, just turned 18, daughter of Chickie, and Kathie McPike laughingly appeal to Kathie's foster-brother, Kevin Malone, to take them to their first dance. Kevin, who is 24, and is regarded as a coming young physician, promises. Then, teased by the two girls because he is eight years older than they, he seizes Pippin and kisses her.

Pippin is thrilled and tells her mother. Chickie, meantime, thinks of the time she went to her first dance and wonders if the same fate will befall her lovely daughter. The horrible memories of her own girlhood—the bitter, harsh scenes of her life—she doesn't want Pippin to go through that.

At the dance Pippin has a glorious time. . She lummed against the young man's heart. "Feel like that?" Kevin asked. She said: "You darling! I didn't dream you'd treat me this grand. And how you dance!" "Pretty good for an old buck?" he teased, swinging her from the room to a little balcony. He looked terribly handsome and strong. He tells her she will have to watch her step, because he won't be around to look after her on account of his going to Europe. She feels lonely about his going, but tells him that she cannot fall for any other man if "I keep the image of you in my mind."

Kevin brings her home and she finds Chickie waiting for her. After telling her mother about the wonderful time she had in Kevin's company, she kisses her goodnight and goes to bed. She dreams again of Kevin's kiss. Overnight Pippin grew up. She goes to more and more dances. However, Chickie thinks her daughter has gone into the strange land of adolescence too soon. David comforts her. He loves his daughter and a strange sense of understanding exists between them. Kevin kisses Pippin goodbye and sails for Europe. Pippin writes in her diary that she would always love Kevin. She meets a handsome young ensign, Bill Loder, at a party and he tells her she is the prettiest girl in the world.. Bill adores Pippin not so acquire a "past." Pippin writes a long letter to Kevin, never guessing how it might touch his heart. Pippin discusses love with Chickie. She writes in her diary that she likes Bill, but not in the way she likes Kevin. Bill spends his last day on shore with Pippin. He kisses her and tells her of his love. Pippin tells him she is in love with someone else. Bill leaves with Pippin watching from the shore. The following week Pippin graduated from school. One day she receives a letter and a bracelet from Bill Loder. She read the letter over and over, but at first studied Kevin's picture, Bill fades into the background. The family moved to the summer home in the mountains. Pippin enters the swimming contest and during the race saves Eric Erick from drowning. Chickie meets Barry Dunne, the man who had caused her all her sorrow and heart break. It was more than 20 years since they had seen each other. Pippin meets Barry who remarks that she looks like her mother. David comes along and Chickie leaves with him, without saying goodbye to Barry. She is afraid she will have to tell Pippin of her past. Talking to David later, they discuss the younger generation. Pippin receives a letter from Kevin, which made her happy. She goes to college.

"It's the third time I've seen Wilma Trask pass out in a month."

"Yes, and now she's going with that dissipated Charlie Banks anything can happen."

Pippin and Kathleen had been to a party. Shocking things happened. Several of the girls drank too much. There was a lot of wild dashing to the machines and wilder racing through skiddy streets; plenty of petting in all the dark corners, with the hostess running about asking everyone what she should do to get the couples to the supper table, and finally a rather terrible scene when one of the mothers found two quite young boys treating everyone from flasks.

Now behind closed doors Pippin and Kathleen talked about it. Both girls were a little scared. Both hoped their mothers wouldn't hear.

"I don't blame Mrs. Tyler," said Kathleen. "She spent a lot of money getting in musicians and a grand supper that was hardly touched, and it's pretty embarrassing when you can't walk up a flight of stairs without stumbling over half a dozen stupid people who haven't sense enough to do their loving in private. All I hope is that mother doesn't find out about it, or I can see where my style gets cramped good and plenty.

"As far as I'm concerned," said Pippin, "I don't care. There's no real fun in that kind of party."

"Yes, but the trouble is they'll cut out all parties. They'll think wild things happen everywhere. Parents have no moderation."

Kathleen walked over to her bureau, opened a box and took out a very exotic corsage. The orchids were white with lovely rose-colored centers. She held them against her dark face with a sigh.

"I've accomplished something, Pippin. I've educated Bob to orchids."

KATHLEEN LOOKS LIKE A MADONNA

Kathleen had her hair parted in the middle and drawn to a coil at her neck. Her eyes were clear, her forehead beautiful. She looked like a young madonna until she began to talk. Then her wide, rippling mouth, painted very red, went up at the corners; her nose showed its upward tilt. She had the impish, rollicking air of a street gamin.

"I wish I was the kind of a girl men naturally wanted to do princely things for. Dozens of orchids, tons of candy, diamond tiaras!"

Kathleen smiled and lightly touched the flowers to her lips. Edward entered . . . with an air of great secrecy closed the door softly behind him. Kathleen dropped her corsage into the box and turned very red.

"Enter without knocking, Eddie, dear, and some day you'll catch me in my birthday suit."

"Don't worry about that," said Edward tartly. "You wear little enough on the outside and God knows none of you have anything within."

"Did God tell you or did you find out for yourself? You must have done plenty of research to reach such a sweeping conclusion. Maybe your technique was wrong."

Edward went over and sat next to Pippin on the bed. "Wise kids, aren't you? Know just about everything. Nice orchids, Kathie. Just one of the little things I've got to talk about."

"Toodle-oo! Nobody in this house needs to go to church with little Eddie around to make us sermons."

"That won't stop me, Kathie, if you like those orchids and you ought to be ashamed to wear them. Bob can't afford $5 for flowers and $4 more to take you dancing in a hotel. You're a shabby little gold digger to angle for it as, of course, you did."

Kathleen turned crimson . . .

"The idea . . . I've never spoken of orchids. I told Bob buttercups would do."

EDWARD LISTENS TO GIRL'S PATTER

"Yeah— I know how a girl passes out that line. You'll get the flowers for a month or two and lose your man for life. Fellows get wise to you janes—just a bunch of chiselers. No boy going to college can afford you! None with any spirit would want you."

"Don't make us laugh, Edward!" countered Pippin, indignant as she saw Kathleen's joy gone. "You think they won't want us—oh, no! The pure young man yells for a modest violet. But he picks the red lily. They do it every time. Don't we know?"

"Get that smart idea out of your head pretty damn quick, Pippin! And that's just the core of the whole stupidity. Girls do these silly things like angling for flowers and going passionate because they think it's the way to popularity. I'm telling you a man has no respect for a girl like that. No one wants what he knows he can have!"

"Edward," said Pippin with more heat than wisdom, "you grips me terribly. Why hasn't a girl a right to try things? Fellows have been doing it since the beginning of the world."

"It's not a question of right but of self-preservation. Girls can't get away with it. They never have and they never will."

"That's a cheap reason, Edward. You mean we don't dare think because they're not safe. I rather be brave and take a chance."

"If you were really brave," said Edward incisively, "you wouldn't be apeing the messy things men do. You'd figure out a destiny for yourself and work toward it."

"Oh darling, what a wonderful remark!" Pippin cooed, linking her arm in Edward's. "Can I use it for a college theme?—Free girl bless new trails to loveless Eden!"

'YOU KIDS START THINGS,' SAYS EDDIE

"And I still maintain," Edward snapped through shut teeth, "that you kids start these things, not because you're driven to it by any feelings you have but because you think the fellows expect it. So you're not free but much more servile than the women of the past. Your poor saps of grandmothers catered to men because they had no choice—they were poor girls trying to get along. The only way was to annex a man. But they got wedding rings with bed and board for life before they allowed the man and his wishes to overwhelm them. You FREE kids give it all away and get nothing in return but disillusion or worse."

"It's a grand speech, Eddie," said Kathleen, regaining her composure. "But it doesn't alter the facts. We're human and have feelings as well as a man has. Also, we get away with it, all right, all right."

"Yes, Kathie—how long is Wilma Trask going to get away with it?"

Both girls colored hotly. They looked at each other, then at Edward.

"Who told you?" they whispered in awed, frightened voices.

"I heard all about it. Did you think it was a good party? Did you enjoy it?"

"Oh, Edward, it was awful. We nearly died."

"Why was it so awful—it's just the freedom you're yelling for."

"Oh, no, it isn't—it was messy and stupid and terribly unnecessary. It made a person ashamed to belong to the same race."

'EMOTION,' HE SNAPS, 'IS LIKE WATER'

Edward said bitingly: "I see. You think you can start a little and stop while it's pleasant and dignified. But emotion is like water tumbling down a hill. Once it leaps over, there's no stop till it hits bottom—usually in the mud."

"Edward," said Pippin, drawing a loud harsh breath, "don't you tell Mary and Helena about that party! Because you have sense enough to see they'd only worry themselves sick. Kathie and I are down at college. We can do as we please. If we're so dumb that we go in for this hot stuff, do you think anything you'd say could stop us? Do you think we'd be worth saving?"

"I'm afraid I do, Pippin. And I'm burnt up about that party and your fresh line of chatter and those orchids of Kathie's."

"Don't worry about the orchids," Kathie flamed. "You've taken the joy out of them, all right."

"Damn glad I have! If you think I'll stand by and see you messing up your life without saying a word, you're mistaken."

"What are you going to do when you get to heaven, grandpa, and can't tell God where to head in?"

"And Edward, darling," Pippin leaned over quickly and kissed the stern young man's cheek: "Kathie and I are mad about these little things. You are, too. Can we have one, once in a while?"

YOUTH TURNS ANGRY AT TEASING GIRLS

Edward went scarlet. He got up, strolled to the door, stood there with his back turned. Finally he said in a harsh quiet:

"You kids know very well I'm not advising against an occasional kiss, and you know what I do mean. There's only one way to play that game—stop before you beg..!"

The door closed. The two girls confronted each other. Pippin shrugged:

"Well—I guess that will keep the old haloes on straight for a day or two more."

Kathleen gave the lovely flowers a vicious shove. Tears rushed to her eyes.

"I never want to see an orchid again."

Both were shaken and nervous.

Pippin walked home in a tumult. At the Presidio wall she paused and looked down through wistful trees to the evening water. They were quiet with a deep rhythmic peace. Life should be serene like that—beautiful. Suddenly she remembered the night she stood on this hill and Bill kissed her goodby; held her close in his arms while he kissed her. She loved it! She wanted it. Her heart flamed. That couldn't be wrong—a man's arms about you—a man's lips on yours. Surely not!

Miss Allen London Bound to Study for 'David Copperfield' Role

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Motion Picture Editor, Universal Service

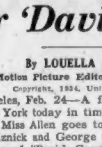
Los Angeles, Feb. 24—A fast plane will whizz Elizabeth Allen to New York today in time to catch the S. S. Manhattan for London. Miss Allen goes to Europe on a personal mission for David Selznick and George Cukor—a mission that will include a study of "David Copperfield" and Charles Dickens. "Copperfield" is supposed to be the life story of the English author.

Miss Allen will herself play the role of Copperfield's mother and she is the first out of a cast of 65 to be chosen.



Naturally, Miss Allen is rejoicing over the opportunity her three weeks in London will give her to visit her husband, William J. O'Brien.

Hollywood will prepare to meet a new star and watch Hollywood theatricize this new player. Louella O. Parsons And let me tell you if he receives or accepts a single dinner invitation, then I am willing to call myself a full sister to Ananias. His name is Sammy and although he isn't in jail he should be for he is a convicted murderer. Now that we have sufficiently aroused your curiosity (we hope) he is the lion that killed a lioness in "The Big Cage" during Clyde Beatty's act in Cleveland. Sammy will be the star in "The Lost Jungle" which Nat Levine puts into production immediately with the famous lion trainer.

B. B. Kahane, president of RKO-Radio Studios, left on a hurried trip to New York last night. There was talk that he may present his resignation to M. H. Aylesworth, head of the RKO-Radio organization. Little could be learned of the purpose of his trip, but it's known that Mr. Kahane has had an offer from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and some of his friends intimate that he will accept that offer and while in New York hand in his resignation from RKO. However, as all of the officials at RKO know, Mr. Aylesworth is a good talker and a sound thinker and he may persuade his able lieutenant to change his mind.

Arline Judge is little but oh, my! Once that girl makes up her mind she gets what she roes after. When Arline was in New York with her husband, Wesley Ruggles, they saw the play, "She Loves Me Not" and right then and there Arline made a mental note that she was going to get that job or else. And now the job is hers and as soon as she finishes "The Great Magoo" with Jack Oakie she will get busy on her dialogue for "She Loves Me Not" at Paramount.

Is there an actor on the order of the late Ernest Torrence in Hollywood? or in New York, for that matter? If there is, if he will communicate with Hunt Stromberg at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, he may get himself a very good job in "The Thin Man." Hunt is searching frantically for a character lead in this story. He must be six feet, two or three inches tall and an actor with experience. William Powell, of course, has the lead but this character is second in importance and the picture cannot go into production until the right type is found.

The old reliable firm of Tweedledee and Tweedledum, started in "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland," may continue to flourish on the Paramount lot. Emanuel Cohen is considering co-starring Jack Oakie and Roscoe Karns in "Is Zat So?" Now don't get excited, I know that we printed that Jimmie Gleason and Robert Armstrong would play the parts they created on the stage, but Gleason is all tied up with new contracts at Fox and cannot be spared, so Roscoe Karns plays the role, while Jack Oakie will play the prize fighter role that first brought Robert Armstrong into the public eye.

Gloria Stuart, domestic troubles notwithstanding, is devoting plenty of time to her movie career. She has just been borrowed by the Halperins for the lead in "The Great American Harem," at Radio. Glenn Tryon, who has been working on the script, will return to acting in this picture. William Gargan plays opposite Miss Stuart. That is, if he can be spared from the many jobs Radio is wishing on him.

He has been seeing VIRGINIA PEINE LEHMAN for well over two weeks, escorting her to the fights and other places; his sighs and wishes to meet his dream girl all a pretty piece of acting on his part; SPENCER TRACY and LORETTA YOUNG created a lot of interest when they appeared at church together Sunday. NANCY CARROLL, lovely in an extremely smart sports costume, at Santa Anita and who was the handsome stranger with whom NANCY was lunching? # David Blair McClosky Soloist at Symphony Concert

By MOSES SMITH

The program of this week's Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, led by Serge Koussevitzky, consists of the overture to Gluck's "Iphigenia in Aulis," Charles Martin Loeffler's "Evocation" for women's chorus and orchestra, Hugo Wolf's "Prometheus," and the Brahms E minor symphony.

Wolf's setting of Goethe's poem for baritone and orchestra, which employs the services of David Blair McClosky as soloist, was performed yesterday for the first time at Boston Symphony concerts. The performance, under Dr. Koussevitzky's spirited leadership, was electric in its vividness. Mr. McClosky sang powerfully did the music sound, that it seemed inexplicable the work should have been neglected hitherto. Mr. McClosky sang ably as musician and interpreter, with a respect and feeling for the virile, exciting text. It is, therefore, with no disrespect for his rising talent that it is suggested that "Prometheus" needs a huge voice of the calibre of, say, Chaliapin's.

The presentation of "Evocation" was in keeping with the sensitively made score of a musician of "Old World" who is justly proud. Who among contemporary composers could match the delicate sonorities contained in this work? The performance was enhanced by the beautiful singing of the Cecilia Society Chorus, which is conducted by Arthur Fiedler. Following the presentation Mr. Loeffler was yesterday called to the stage several times by the audience's applause.

Dr. Koussevitzky by no means exhausted himself in these two works, during which there was an extraordinary moving performance of the Brahms symphony. The only flaw in the concert, so far as I was concerned, was the opening overture, during the playing of which I found myself often at odds with Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation as to style and tempo.

Since the blaze Wednesday evening Bird has been living with relatives. He went to the damaged house today for the first time since the fire, which caused $2500 damage, and discovered the theft. The police believe that boys, aware that the house was deserted, had taken the weapons.

Athletic Voices; Big Bill Tilden And Strangler Lewis ↕ Great Tennis Showman Drops Wayside Pearls

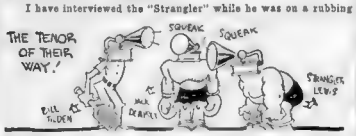
By AUSTEN LAKE

Like Stitch McCarthy, the mayor of Grand st., who had a gold headed cane, a Rolls-Royce and had said, "God is good, so what the hell," Bill Tilden, the impresario of tennis tourists, replied to my remark, "Tennis has been good to you," by saying, "The benefit has been mutual."

An ego-ist, brimming with self confidence, with an eye for pictorial effect, Tilden represents the best sports showman I have ever met, equalled, if at all, by only one other man. You would never guess . . . "Strangler" Lewis, the wrestler and old conniver. No two men, on point of physical appearance, could be more opposite; Tilden the spider-legged, narrow-faced dilletante who loves a graceful posture and a musical phrase and Lewis, shaped like an enormous oyster, surmounted by a 20-pound head, gnarled like a fungus, with a satyr's grin that splits his face from ear to ear. But how, mes amis, those two men can talk, rolling out candied phrases in their light tenor tones, richly ornamented sayings that flick like the point of a rapier.

I have interviewed the "Strangler" while he was on a rubbing



table, having his great, pouchy body anointed with sweet-smelling oils, as is his custom before wrestling matches, and watched while the handler riffled great dribs of lard as a housewife fumbles with bread batter. And the voice, which might have been Tilden's voice, gave off a running fire of philosophies in a high-pitched lilt.

And Little Men With Big Voices

It is surprising how many first flight athletes have upper register, almost contralto voices—like Jack Dempsey, who talked almost in a squeak. By contrast, I will never forget the first day of football practice at Lafayette in the fall of 1915, when I heard a bull-bass voice of a quarterback croaking signals that welled from the depths of his being like a trump of doom. Only when I looked, the quarterback was a pint-sized picayune, little bigger than a rabbit.

It was most interesting, later that fall, when we held our annual pitched battle with Pennsylvania at Franklin Field, to hear the altercation which "Rabbit" Clough, for such was his name, got into with "Heinie" Miller, Penn's all-America end, and a husky bruiser with a sofa-pillow chest and legs like a calf hippo. For that afternoon, little Rabbit's hollow howl, sounding like a resined plank drawn across an empty barrel, crossed with husky Heinie's shrill squeal, till the opposing coaches dragged both players off the field for fear of turning the game into a giggling burlesque.

But this has nothing to do with tennis as she is being played tonight at the Garden, nor with the fact that Tilden said today that every top ranking tennis player has a blind spot, even himself, which he never quite cures. This is the same theory that major league pitchers have about batters, so that you will always find the pitchers of one club, huddled together under the dugout pipe rails, while the batters of the other club are taking pregame practice, exchanging notes on the swinging styles of certain rookie hitters.

Visits Osteopath Twice a Week

"I play best when I feel worst," said Tilden today. "Look out when you feel too good."

That, too, is a familiar baseball axiom among pitchers. I have heard "Lefty" Grove tell how, often, he has warmed up before going into the box and noticed that his "stuff" on the ball was abnormal, so that his curve would drift an additional three inches and cause him to miss the corners of the plate.'

"When I feel unusually good," said Lefty, "I'm unusually careful. Some of the days when I have had more than my usual stuff, I've been knocked out of the box, and there have been other days when I felt depressed and didn't have half my normal power, that I've turned in two and three-hit shutouts."

"Do you not," I asked Tilden, "regard yourself as a sort of physical freak?" referring to his exceptional wearing qualities.

He said "no," without rancor, adding that he owed his long athletic life to the fact that he never failed to visit an osteopath for bone treatment and inspection twice every week, having a preferred list of such specialists for almost every city in the country.

"And," said he, "if Babe Ruth would start that today, 'he'd add three years to his playing life."

During the last swing around the country, or the "circuit," as Bill terms it, he and Vines played to slightly more than 100,000 paid admissions, exceeding his fondest dream, and at least half of which, he estimates, were folk who have never watched big league tennis before, either amateur or professional.

"We've satisfied a lot of curiosity," said Long William, "only now I'm the one that's curious . . . to see how much longer the prosperity will keep going."

124 NAMED IN KENTUCKY DERBY

Louisville, Ky., Feb. 24 (AP)—Singing Wood, generally regarded as the champion two-year-old of 1933, the Dixiana farm's fleet filly, Mata Hari, and 122 others of the nation's leading three-year-olds were announced today as nominated for the 60th running of the Kentucky Derby here May 5.

The number named was six more than last year, despite the reduction from $50,000 to $30,000 in the added value of the stakes. Out of the 124, some dozen or more of the thoroughbreds will show enough pace and stamina during the grueling spring training to enter the heath-taking mile and a quarter race at Churchill Downs.

The nominations include 76 colts and geldings and 11 fillies and include all but four of the ten leading money winners among last year's two-year-olds.

Up Pops a Grand Slam as American Tennis Aces Trump Frenchmen

The long William Tilden gave Martin Plaa a full evening of it, winning their singles match in straight sets. In this fine action picture, tall Bill is shown passing the French invader with a bullet drive. To make it complete the shot accounted for the game.

Monsieur Henri Cochet brought the gallery to their feet with a remarkable back hand return after a long sprint to the baseline in the doubles match. But Henri's college try availed the French invaders little when the Tilden-Vines combination won the match

Vines Near Perfection

Mrs. Wightman Finds "Slim" Sure to Take Rank With Immortals of Tennis History | Californian Compares With 1927 Tilden

By MRS. GEORGE W. WIGHTMAN

Five Times Women's National Singles Champion

One short month ago I would have been loath to confess that Ellsworth Vines could begin to compare with Bill Tilden when the latter was in his amateur prime back around 1927.

But after seeing Vines humble the great Henri Cochet in convincing fashion at Boston Garden last night, rise to the occasion in every emergency and completely dominate the play from beginning to end, I now am inclined to the belief that the tall, lanky Californian is fast approaching perfection.

Vines' confidence impressed me tremendously. Nothing fazed him. It seems apparent that his constant association with Tilden in the recent nationwide tour has been the makings of him. He is a far superior player in every department of the game to the Vines who last played in Boston.

Of course, the fact that the French man was decidedly off his game may have much to do with Vines' impressiveness. Yet I feel certain that the American would have won in any event.

Cochet Disappointing

I was a trifle disappointed in Cochet. I have seen him at his best and I know the strokesman that he is. And I was anxious that Boston see him as the genius of tennis that I know him to be. But the veteran French Davis Cup ace of former years met a master last night, a youth who knew he enjoyed a psychological advantage and made the most of it.

Mrs. G. W. Wightman

Physically, Vines surprises me. I didn't realize that he had the stamina and the reserve to carry him through so many hard matches. He even looks healthy, is springy and seemingly responds to punishment. Time and time again he made ungettable shots, racing the length of the canvas, each time coming back for more.

His beautiful, firm stroking with his long flowing sweep to every shot and the distinct whip at the moment of impact, puts extra poundage on the ball such as I have never before witnessed in all my years following the game. His extraordinary rhythm is eventually going to make him one of the immortals of tennis.

Tilden and Vines enjoyed the advantage of height against their much smaller French foes. I know what height and reach

Poor old Tilden. The 41-year-old campaigner with creaking limbs and broken down chassis. Venerable Tilden on the shady side of life whose world wide prestige, they said, was his only sustaining prop in the age old battle between youth and experience.

The grand old man of tennis about to give away to advancing years and the surging charge of ambitious challengers of less sere and hallowed years.

What a laugh! How the bald-spotted Tilden must be snickering up his sleeve.

PLAA NONPLUSSED

As one Martin Plaa of France, he scored. Didn't he suffer an unmerciful defeat to the tune of [illegible] sets, 6—4 [illegible] 6—3, in the opening match at Boston Garden last night?

"Tilden marvelous," Plaa stated after his match with Tilden. "Bires legs, they don't mind these concrete floor. Mine so sore, I can barely move. He is wonderful. Me, I so tired, and all in. How he do it, I no know."

And that just about tells the story. For it would seem that the great Tilden, even at this late stage of an athletic career, when other leading stars of sports endeavor are well past their useful prime, still goes irevitably on, perhaps not improving, but still the [illegible] and colorful player of

INDIAN SIGN ON COCHET

But the tall and kid-faced Californian now has the Indian sign on the [illegible] Frenchman. Both Vines and Cochet are willing to admit this.

"I feel certain of beating Cochet every time I step on a tennis court with him," Vines remarked today.

"I have played him five times in all and have yet to lose. It seems as though I reach my heights against Cochet, while he plays well under his usual standard against me. Notice Cochet's great improvement against [illegible]

Bingham Says Harvard Crew Quarters Safe

William J. Bingham, director of athletics at Harvard, this afternoon denied that the crew training quarters at Red Top, Ct., would have to be sold if alumni fail to endow the quarters to provide for the anuual $3000 expenses at Red Top.

Bingham also stated that Red Top had not been mentioned at all as regards any cut in the athletic budget at Harvard. He said the quarters would be occupied as usual this year by the Crimson crew forces.

The question of the continuance of Red Top training activities arose today when the Harvard Crimson, undergraduate daily, included a report that Bingham on Friday afternoon had made the following formal recommendations

That either the university's $105,000 worth of property at Red Top be endowed with non-university funds or that the varsity quarters be sold as soon as possible to finance the annual $3000 overhead charges on the remaining land and equipment.

Bingham said this afternoon that plans for both the 1934 and 1935 Red Top stretches of three weeks of training had been completed.

N. L. Sluggers, Clap Hands! New Ball 1.97 'Faster'

Baltimore, Feb. 24—Rejoice ye National League sluggers. Especially you, Lefty O'Doul, and you, Hack Wilson. You haven't been getting many base hits the past few seasons—but brighter days are in store.

After considerable experimentation, a Johns Hopkins University scientist announced that the new standard major league baseball is exactly 1.97 per cent "faster" than the ball used in the National League last year.

So, Lefty and Hack, some of those long flies that opposing outfielders have been snagging on you will go for home runs next season. For the scientist, Bertin Rodis, says a 294-foot hit in 1933 will be good for 300 feet in '34.

And you know how much six feet can mean when Babe Herman or Wes Schulmerich is chasing after a drive.

Mr. Boston Says:—

Loughran Is Confident Has Lost $300,000 Seeks New Fortune

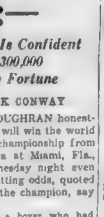
By JACK CONWAY

TOMMY LOUGHRAN honestly believes he will win the world heavyweight championship from Primo Carnera at Miami, Fla., on next Wednesday night even though the betting odds, quoted at 4 to 1 on the champion, say he is wrong.

I never met a boxer who had any greater confidence in his own ability than Loughran. Before his first bout with Jack Sharkey in New York, in the fall of 1929, he thought he could box his way past any man in the world

I met Loughran in Bill Carey's office in the New York Garden, the day after his meeting with Sharkey.



Mr. Boston

"When Sharkey hit me on the chin I felt like a youngster who is climbing over a fence to see a ball game and is belted on the head by a baseball bat," said Loughran. "I never knew anybody could hit so hard."

The Sharkey defeat and advancing years slowed Loughran down When he received the decision over Sharkey in Philadelphia last fall, he was only a shadow of his former self. Sharkey, also, had gone back, but he had not slipped as much as Loughran. I thought Sharkey should have received the decision This opinion was shared by the Philadelphia crowd, which was satisfied when Loughran was able to avoid being knocked out

Loughran Now 'Broke'

LOUGHRAN EARNED $300,000 during his ring career, but is now "broke." He invested his money in real estate, and he was washed over financially during the depression.

Loughran is fighting because he needs the money. He hopes he will be able to outfumble Carnera and win the decision, in which event he would be able to get one big money shot with Max Baer as an opponent.

Loughran will not get a great deal of financial nourishment out of the title bout. His contract calls for a 12½ per cent cut of the gate, and it now looks as if there are not going to be more than $100,000.

There are a great many people in Florida this year, but they are counting their pennies. They refuse to pay top prices to see Primo and Loughran battle. It is possible that a last minute curiosity will help put the show over.

It has also been difficult to steam up interest in the bout on account of the great difference in weight between the two men. Carnera weighs 265 pounds against 186 for Loughran.

JOHNNY INDRISANO made a fine impression with Coast fans when he won from Chick Devlin in San Francisco. Indrisano is determined for a match with Young Corbett, former world welterweight champion.

Random Shots at Target

THE CROWD at the Garden tennis last night was not up to the gathering that greeted Tilden and Vines when they first showed here . . . Perhaps the fact it is a two night attraction kept the crowd down . . . The cheaper seats were almost all filled, which proved that even tennis devotees no longer care to pay top prices to see their favorite sport . . . Tilden is still the drawing card . . . Vines, Plas and Cochet are good enough to draw for the show . . . Ed Don George will be back in town next week to defend his world heavyweight mat title against Ernie Dusek at the Boston Garden on Wednesday night, . . . Dusek is a young, fiery grappler and believes he will conquer the champion.

NEMO LEIBOLD, READING BOSS, VISITS FENS

By JOE CASHMAN

The Red Sox may have a new pitcher or two before the sun sets today.

Harry "Nemo" Leibold, manager of the Fenway farm at Reading, Pa., is in town to report on the qualifications of his scrubs, and Eddie Collins promises to listen attentively to any nice things the little pilot may have to say about hurlers

Already two of the farmers have been named for a trial with the varsity. Al Niemiec, former Holy Cross third sacker, will get a chance to prove his assertion that he can keep "Bucky" Walters and Billy Werber on the bench, while George Hockett, a young southpaw hurler who won 16 games last season, will be taken along to learn a few tricks from the seven other southpaws on the staff.

THAT READING MUDDLE

With Niemiec in the fold, the Sox have two candidates for every fielding position. That's plenty, Collins feels, but he would like to add to the dozen pitchers now on the roster and hopes Leibold can recommend a few.

The new hurlers, if any, will be right handers, not because sight of the present 12 are southpaws, but for the very excellent reason that there are no portsiders left at Reading, with Hockett gone

The affairs at Reading are still in a muddle. The Sox will not agree to the increase in rental demanded by the owners of the ball park, and there isn't another suitable orchard in the town. If looks right now as though a compromise would be reached, but there's nothing certain about it.

NEMO SMART MANAGER

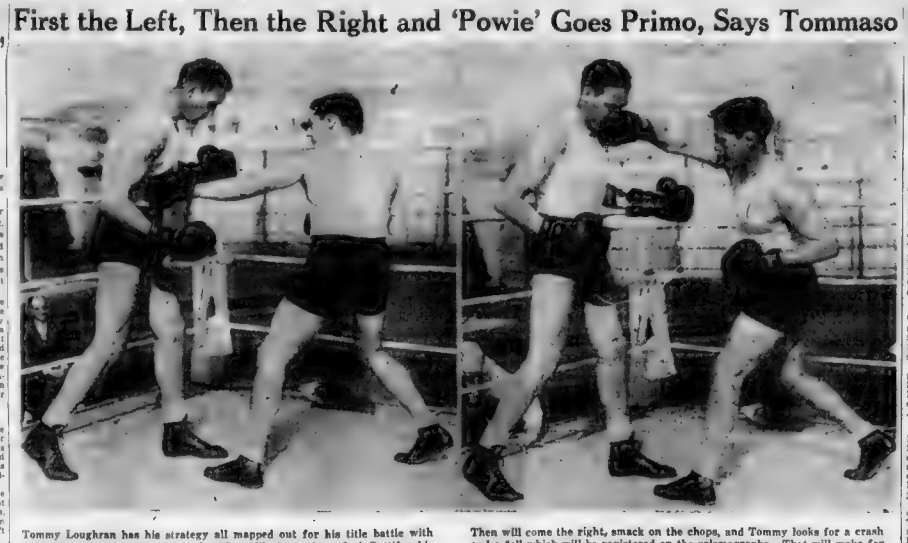
Whatever happens, though, the farm will be kept running, under Leibold's direction, in some Class D league. Collins will send out contracts to the players after his conference with "Nemo" today and notify them later where they will hang their straw hats.

Leibold, an opponent of Bob Quinn and a former mate of Collins on the White Sox, took a mediocre club last spring and finished within a few points of first place. If he has another good season, he couldn't want for major league offers next year

First the Left, Then the Right and 'Powie' Goes Primo, Says Tommaso



Tommy Loughran has his strategy all mapped out for his title battle with Primo Carnera next Wednesday. Loughran illustrates it on Jack Pettifer, his sparring partner, who is almost as big as Primo. First, says Tommy, will come a left to the body which will bring Primo's chin within range.

Then will come the right, smack on the chops, and Tommy looks for a crash and a fall which will be registered on the seismographs. That will make for a change in rulers and crown Tommaso of Philadelphia the heavyweight king. At least that's the way Tommy works it out, ignoring his powder puff right.

BIG MILE THREE IN 1500-METER TITLE RACE

By WALTER KILEY

Tonight's three cornered race among Billy Bonthron, Glenn Cunningham and Gene Venzke will be the last opportunity to witness the three greatest American middle distance runners in the same field. They face the starter's gun in the 1500 meter run, termed the "Olympic Mile," feature of the National championships at Madison Square Garden, New York

Bonthron and Venzke will meet again in the intercollegiate 1500-meter run on March 5 at Madison Square but as Kansas is not an IC4A member, Cunningham must sit on the sidelines.

Venzke and Cunningham are expected to race in the mile at the New York A. C. games on March 17, but Bonthron will be out of the competition.

VENZKE HOLDS RECORD

The close finish in the Baxter Mile at the New York A. C. games last Saturday night has left the experts just as much in the dark as ever as to the relative abilities of the Kansan and Princetonian. Bonthron's margin of victory was just three inches.

Once more it is a Venzke record that the trio are pointing at. The Pennsylvanian's mile indoor record of 4.10 is safe for awhile. Now the hope is that his 3 53.4 mark for the 1500 meters will be broken. Provided the three of them race the entire distance, it will be in the nature of a surprise if they fail to establish a new mark.

Virtually every outstanding athlete in the country is entered with the exception of Keith Brown of Yale, indoor and outdoor world record holder in the pole vault. Brown leaped 14 feet 4 inches last Saturday. Yale is engaging in dual competition today, and Brown is thereby forced to forego the nationals.

RECORDS TREMBLE

Any number of records are due to topple. The most probable are the 600, 1000 and 1500 meters runs, 1500 meters walk, 65 meters hurdles, and running high jump.

Walter Marks of California, who only last week set up a new indoor world record of 6 feet 8¼ inches in the high jump, hopes to go even higher tonight. He has set his heart on reaching the 6 feet 9 inch mark, and if he succeeds he will be world holder, is equally determined to regain his lost prestige.

One of the headline events on the program will be the medley relay in which Princeton, present champion, will not defend.

It was in this event that Billy Bonthron first came to fame, winning the 1500-meter leg, the Princeton star covered the distance in faster time than the individual championship at 1500 meters was run by Gene Venzke and Glenn Cunningham.

B. A. A. TEAM STRONG

Harvard is sending a fine medley team to take Princeton's place, but will be hard pressed to stave off the B. A. A., New York University, Manhattan, New York A. C. and Columbia quartets.

Jack Ryder's B. A. A. team has John Collier running the 200-meter leg, Donald Fleet in the 400 meters, E. C. McGilvan in the 800 meters, and Brendon Moynahan in the 1500 meters.

ARSENAL LEADS SOCCER LOOP IN ENGLAND

London, Feb. 24 (AP)—The Arsenal Gunners emerged from today's English football league battles in undisputed possession once more of the leadership of the first division, thanks to Huddersfield suffering a defeat

While the Gunners, champions of the league, were marking up a 1-0 victory at Newcastle, United Huddersfield slipped from joint occupancy of the top berth by taking a 1-0 defeat at Leicester City

Derby County, erstwhile leader, could do no better than tie Sheffield Wednesday at home 1-1 and Grimsby Town, long heading the second division and apparently sure of promotion, hammered out another victory, by 2-0, at Plymouth Argyle's grounds, to keep ten points ahead of the Brentford outfit, which also won.

The Scottish football league suffered its third defection in two seasons when Dundee United dropped out of the second division owing to financial difficulties and season the division lost Armadale and Bo'ness. The second division is now cut to 17 teams with Brechin City, Leith Athletic, Hamilton Academical and Montrose, Scottish league champions, leading their respective divisions.

Weather Limits Crowd and Only 6847 Made Turnstiles Click

By BILL GRIMES

Due to the cold weather and the icy conditions of the roads, the attendance at the tennis carnival was below expectations. Although the advance sale was larger than before the previous match at the Garden, only 6847 pay customers trickled the gates, after slipping $8496.72 into the box office

During his singles match with Martin Plas, former coach of the French Davis Cup team, Bill Tilden divided his attention between his opponent and the size of the house. Yet, he won, in straight sets.

With all due respect to Elsworth Vines, Henri Cochet and Martin Plas, William Tilden, 2d, of Germantown, Pa., is THE attraction. He has the shots and equally important the color. And how he puts it on.

Although the players are now rated as professionals, they are still amateurs at heart. This was clearly demonstrated during the doubles, when, after losing the long first set, Tilden and Vines refused to ease up, despite the late hour, and crashed through to win by taking the next two sets

Incidentally Mons. Plas has more circus shots than Bill Tilden, Ellsworth Vines or Henri Cochet. During the doubles, Plas pulled off one of the greatest shots of the night when, after being caught off balance, he made a return from an almost impossible angle.

The Tilden Troupers are scheduled to play in Montreal next Thursday and Friday.

According to the players, the routing on the first Western trip was terrible. They jumped back and forth until they were dizzy. The only element in their favor was the weather. And the only break they got was the cancellation of the Tulsa, Okla., date, which would have necessitated a jump from Dallas, Tex., to Tulsa, and then back to St. Louis.

Ex-Gov. Alvan T. Fuller and two of his boys enjoyed the matches from a box. One of the late arrivals was Miss Miriam Hopkins, of stage and screen fame.

Hauser Seeks Berth With Braves

Minneapolis, Feb. 24 (AP)—Joe Hauser, the American Association's home run king, says he is ready for another chance in the "big show."

Hauser, who hit 69 home runs last year for Minneapolis to set a new Association record, came here ostensibly to talk with M. J. Kelley, club president, about signing his 1934 contract, but instead revealed today he is anxious to have another trial in the major leagues.

The slugging first baseman as earned he understood Bill McKechnie, manager of the Boston Braves, would like to give him a tryout during the coming season. President Kelley told Hauser he would communicate with Judge Emil Fuchs, owner of the Braves, and endeavor to make a deal.

Bruins Try Out 2 Amateur Stars

Montreal, Feb. 24 (AP) — Two eastern townships intermediate hockey players have been given permission to try out with Boston Cubs of the Canadian-American League after Art Ross of Boston became interested

They are Barney Johnson, big defenseman of the Cowansville, Que., team of the Missisquoi-Brome League and A. Dumont of Sutton, Que. Permission for them to practice with the professionals was granted by President A. Gagnon of the Quebec Amateur Hockey Association.

TILDEN STEALS TENNIS SHOW

den tonight and see if I am not right.

Vines is right. He demonstrated this on the first day of the show when they first met, at Forest Hills the second time and at Wimbleton the third. Each time, Cochet was ahead. Yet each time, Vines felt certain he could win out and by putting on a little extra pressure he did

The same rule holds true for their Franco-American matches. Several times Vines stood in peril of losing sets to Cochet in New York and again last night in Boston. But each time, Vines rose to the occasion while Cochet tightened up noticeably

It is quite evident that the American professionals are superior to the French team at this particular moment. Cochet and Plas have yet to accustom themselves to the hard surfaced floors and indoor conditions, particularly the lights.

Vines is improved to an exaggerated degree by his competition with Tilden. His confidence is his chief asset. He completely routed Cochet while Tilden was whitewashing Plas.

Thus, as the closing Boston matches are held at the Garden tonight, the United States pros have yet to lose a match. They won a clean sweep in New York, and again at Boston.

A continuation of their sensational performances as Plas meets Vines and Tilden engages Cochet, tonight, will see the Americans leaving Boston without the loss of a match in the series.

HEARST TO GIVE SPEEDBOAT TROPHY

New York, Feb 24—The first international speedboat races, with champions of 12 European nations competing with America's best, will be held in Florida waters next month. It was announced today.

Plans for the races were discussed at a meeting of speedboat enthusiasts at the Hotel Lexington. The grand prize will be an elaborate trophy given by William Randolph Hearst.

Eight racers from abroad are here now and four more will arrive soon., it was said, with England, France, Italy, Spain and Hungary already listed for the water speed classic.

Racing will begin off New Smyrna, Fla., on March 3. Other events will be held off Miami and Palm Beach.

American racers, as well as several foreign champions, now are in Florida, and the speed drivers who will fly the Stars and Stripes will begin their competition off New Smyrna on February 25.

Among those who attended the discussion of plans, held after a dinner at the Hotel Lexington, were John Wanamaker, Jr., and George H. Townsend, Greenwich Ct., millionaire sportsman.

Vines Near Perfection

mean to a player. The six-footer has just that more chance to get at the ball.

Tilden Little Pressed

When you see Cochet play Tilden tonight, watch the Frenchman's terrific wrist and forearm snap. The power thus engendered more than compensates for his lack of height and weight. He plays the ball close to him and with a quick snap gets it away.

Last night, Cochet was finding the net on all his best placements. His shots were close but not good. Vines' speed was pressing him continually on the back court. Something tells me that the Frenchman is going to find himself shortly and when he does, our great Americans had better be ready.

It was truly difficult to judge much of Tilden against Plas. The latter was obviously finding himself unable to adjust his game to indoor conditions. It looked as though Tilden held everything in reserve and could have put on pressure at any moment he so desired.

Vines is supreme as a doubles player. I only wish he and Tilden had been paired as a doubles team of amateurs. Tilden was usually handicapped by lack of an aggressive partner, one for whom he had to do all the managing and all the carrying. A Tilden-Vines tandem would have endured in winning fashion anywhere in the world.

N. E. CATHOLIC HIGH BASKET CHAMPIONSHIP NEXT WEEK

TOURNEY OPENS IN CAMBRIDGE NEXT FRIDAY

By BILL CONNELL

A colorful program for the New England championship Catholic High school League basketball tourney of next week at St. Mary's Hall, Cambridge, was outlined today by Rev. George Dowd, director of the C. H. S. sports of Greater Boston.

The series will bring eight teams into the crown fight, with the first games starting at 4 o'clock next Friday afternoon. Two more games are listed for Friday evening, to bring the field down to four for the semifinals of Saturday afternoon. The finalists clash Saturday evening.

Final selection of teams for the tournament is billed for Tuesday. It is certain that Cathedral high of the South End, the league leader, will be a C. H. S. entry. Two teams from the circuit may be sent into the series.

GOLD BASKETBALLS

Careful consideration has narrowed the field down to St. St. Joseph's of Rutland, and Cathedral of Burlington, in Vermont St. John's high of Concord, and St. Mary's of Claremont, in New Hampshire; St. Mary's of Westfield, Cathedral of Springfield, and St. Michael's of Northampton, in Massachusetts, are other front runners in the race for tourney berths.

Gold basketballs for the members of the champion team, silver basketballs for players of the runner-up five, and special medals for all other contants are ready.

CARDINAL O'CONNELL CUP

The Cardinal O'Connell trophy goes to the school winning the tournament as the major award.

With schools of the league in Boston booming the ticket sale, the success of the venture already is assured.

The North Shore Interscholastic court tourney also is on next week, running from Tuesday to Saturday inclusive at the spacious Danvers high gymnasium. The event draws from an entirely different group of schools so no conflict arises between the two sets of court play.

Charley Vye of Danvers, pilot for the North Shore series, has billed a great list of games with Haverhill, Revere, North Quincy, Medford, Gloucester, Lowell, Beverly, Marblehead, among the warring fleet. Vye is aided by John McLaughlin of Swampscott, J. Edward Carroll of Beverly and Charley White of Haverhill.

In the event that the teams are tied in the goals at the end of the regulation periods of 1 more five minute, they will have to play extra time.

Football Practice at Yale Deferred

New Haven, Conn., Feb. 24—Football practice at Yale has been postponed until the third week of March because of the inclement weather. Practice was due to start next Monday.

N. U. Cubs Whip Rivals

Northeastern freshmen track stars won from Huntington school 38 to 30, at the Boston "Y" track today and tomorrow. George Ford will be in the lineup for the second game.

Neither Eddie Shore nor Peggy O'Neil accompanied the Bruins to Ottawa. Shore is on the injured list with a bad ankle, while his fellowtownsman suffered a "Charlie horse" during the Tuesday night game.

---

Due to the fact that they have not been in the ice since they vanquished the Arrows in Philadelphia on Wednesday, the Cubs are going through a practice session today at the Arena.

---

There will be hundreds of Cubs fans in Providence tomorrow night when Myron Lane, Hitchman and Nick Cotsires appear on the blue Friends' Ice. A defeat will end the Cubs first place in the Can-Am League. Consequently there will be another record hockey crowd on hand.

---

Bill Stewart and Az Smith are slated to be the Maple Leaf pilots for the Tuesday night game here. The Leafs will play Providence before they return home.

---

In recognition of his connection with the National Hockey League and his signing of a contract to umpire in the National League, friends of Bill Stewart will tender him a testimonial banquet at the B. A. A. one week from Monday night. The committee is composed of William Nixon, Mario Coffey, Edward M. Sweeney and Joseph H. Sullivan.

H.-Y. Ice Teams Open Series in New Haven

By BILL GRIMES

Harvard and Yale clash in the first game of their annual hockey series tonight in New Haven. After clearing up Princeton, conquerors of the Crimson, in straight games, Yale is, naturally, the favorite. But Harvard has been coming fast of late, and if the Elis carry any superiority complex into the carry, they are liable to get off on the wrong foot.

Handicapped by a noticeable lack of material Coach Joe Stubbs has worked like a Trojan to develop a winning combination at Harvard this season but up to now the Crimson has not won a major game. The Harvard scoring punch is centered in the defense of Yale's goal tender, Joe Rhaine, Rhode Island Red and Yale goalie, has been touted to another big year. Hailed by the Eli Club Tonight as the best goalie who ever wore the crimson, he more than lived up to his billing last year and is expected to do the same thing this season.

Next to Joe Johnny Walsh did most to help the Bulldog cause. Playing right wing, Walsh drove that Yale Club team a few notches above its usual standard. Walsh, who is also the captain of the Yale team, has been drilling his mates for the game.

According to the Canadian American League players, the officials in Quebec are not out to rob visiting clubs, but they are so unfamiliar with the rules that they have been in trouble all season.

The Jerry Hockey Club headhanded and some of the players have signed up with Lewiston Club which will play in Lewiston today and tomorrow. George Ford

Another Popeye Knockout in Next Saturday's Boston Evening American—Don't Fail to Get It!

HOOVER'S FOES BREAK FOR ELECTION

By GEORGE R. HOLMES
International News Service Staff Correspondent

Washington, Feb. 24 (INS)—Republicans in Congress who are up for re-election this year, many of whom are facing tough battles have decided to cut adrift from the Hoover-controlled national committee.

Behind the announcement today, of a merger between the Republican senatorial campaign committee and the Republican congressional campaign committees lies a story of weeks of bickering over finances and strategy that has served to emphasize the schism that exists between the Hoover and anti-Hoover elements in the party.

For the Senate and House campaign committees to cut adrift from the national committee's campaign year is unprecedented in the party's history.

It denotes, for one thing, that most of the Republicans in Congress are out of sympathy with the conduct and policy of the national committee, and a determination on their part to fight their own battles regardless of independently of the national organization.

The combined committees will raise their own funds—they hope to raise $500,000; they will inaugurate something new in political organization: a bureau and so-called "research; they will make no distinction between so-called "regular" Republicans and so-called "Progressives"; they will have their own publicity organization; in short, they will virtually ignore the Republican national committee

SPRAGUE BACKS SALES TAX

Pittsburgh, Feb. 24 (US)—Dr. O M. W. Sprague, former financial adviser to the Bank of England and the first monetary expert to resign from the Roosevelt administration, favors a federal sales tax Dr. Sprague said in an address here:

"I believe a sales tax would be effective if it guaranteed no tax variation during the course of manufacturing an article slated for taxation. In other words, prevent a duplication of the taxation."

Rushmore Monument Contest Praised

Leaders of American letters and arts continued today to reflect the wide interest taken in the contest announced by the Boston Evening American and other Hearst newspapers to obtain inscriptions for the Mount Rushmore National Memorial.

Edwin Markham, famous poet, and Russell Patterson, illustrator and scenic designer, are among the group of writers and artists who have joined in applauding the project.

Markham declared the memorial should furnish the impulse for inscriptions of singular distinction.

Calling Gutzon Borglum, sculptor of the monument, a trail blazer in his chosen medium, Patterson asserted the contest had outstanding purpose and significance.

Borglum is carving on one side of the mountain in South Dakota colossal figures of Washington, Lincoln, Jefferson and Theodore Roosevelt.

HUGE LETTERS PLANNED

On the other side of the rugged peak he will engrave 600 words of inscriptions in letters 13 feet high They will deal with the nine principal events in the development of American history.

These include the writing of the Declaration of Independence; the drafting of the Constitution; the purchase of Louisiana and the ceding of the Floridas to the United States.

Other episodes are the rise of the republic of Texas and its entry as a State; the Mexican war and its acquisition of California; the settlement of the Oregon boundary dispute; the Alaska purchase, and the building of the Panama Canal.

It is for these epochal happenings that the 600 words of description are being sought.

Mr. Borglum and the Rushmore National Memorial Commission, headed by Fred W. Sargent of Chicago, are inviting men, women and school children throughout the country to join in writing the inscriptions through the competition inaugurated for this purpose by the Hearst newspapers this Washington's Birthday.

COMMITTEE TO JUDGE

A national committee is being formed to pass final judgment on the facts submitted in this tournament of American expression.

Local committees will do the initial work of elimination with the entries, reserving the best for the national committee

The country's foremost historians, poets, authors and men of affairs will make up the personnel of the local and national committees.

Cash and scholarship prizes will be offered the contestants in addition to the distinction of having the texts subjects for possible selection and perpetuation in the granite of the monument.

There will also be gold, silver and bronze medals designed by Borglum as well as certificates of merit for contestants.

For the next week the Boston Evening American will carry details of the plans and developments of the national competition. These will be supplemented by special articles on aspects of the Rushmore National Memorial.

A detailed exposition of the contest, its rules and prizes, will be published in the issue of March 4, in the Boston Sunday Advertiser.

Premier Gaston Doumergue announced that he himself would take a hand in the probe of the affairs of the self-slain Serge Stavisky and his giant Bayonne pawnshop swindle and dragged down two governments with it.

Doumergue said he would join Cheron and the heads of two investigating commissions named by the Chamber of Deputies.

The Premier promised the investigators "the widest and most complete facilities.

The continued icy grip of winter on Boston, with its resulting heavy demands on charitable and philanthropic agencies for fuel and warm clothing by the city's needy brought a renewed appeal from drive officials for immediate support of the Emergency Campaign of 1934.

The welfare agencies, already laboring under the heavy burden of demands from the needy, will have an additional load to bear as a result of the federal government's curtailment of distribution of coal at a cost to the agencies of only 2.50 per ton, drive officials revealed.

In the future coal will cost the agencies about $12.50 a ton

Conditions continued to reach headquarters and campaign workers were busy despite the abrupt drop in temperature. At the end of the day it was announced the grand total for the drive had reached $2,384,485.18.

300 P. C. GAIN IN BUSINESS

As an instance of this section's program in recovery, the 1400 salesmen, dealers and department store representatives who will attend the spring meeting of the Frigidaire Sales Corporation of New England at the Hotel Statler Monday are to be informed by General Manager F. S. Pfeil that the company's business for 1933 was 300 per cent of the volume done in January, 1933

Advertising and merchandising plans of Frigidaire Corp., subsidiary of General Motors, will be presented at the meeting by national executives from Dayton, O., headed by H. M. Crowell, vice president, formerly of Boston. He will be accompanied by J. J. Nance, manager of the air-conditioning division, and G. E. Durban, assistant manager of the public utilities division

According to information sent to Pfeil from the home office, Frigidaire is decidedly optimistic over the outlook for business. The merchandising and advertising plans to be inaugurated at the Statler meeting are said to compare favorably with the company's activities along those lines in pre-retrenchment periods.

LEADERS DRIFT OFF WITH DULL DEALINGS

New York, Feb. 24—The stock market gave a poor account of itself in today's short session as the main body of issues failed to display any impressive rallying power and closed with losses running to a point.

Weakness in the rails, motors and the principal industrial stocks was a damper to any effective rally in the rest of the list and more than offset the independent strength in the oils and the aviation stocks.

The commodity markets provided little stimulus to stocks. Wheat, corn and the other grains were easy and ruled fractionally under yesterday's close and cotton sold down from 5 to 20 cents a bale in light trading.

Selling of the motor shares continued in moderate volume today and Chrysler and General Motors suffered fractional losses. The group was highly nervous, although the auto accessory shares were somewhat firmer after yesterday's break. The uneasiness here is due to the reports of widespread cuts in the auto accessory departments and the fears that the labor troubles might spread to the Detroit area, tieing up the major plants.

Stocks displayed an easy tone in the first hour. Aviation shares held relatively firm with Aviation Corporation and United Aircraft showing slight gains. Douglas Aircraft advanced a point. American Telephone was a point higher and Union Pacific gained a similar amount.

Eastman Kodak and Lehman Corporation were down 2 points or more. Chesapeake Corporation, Continental Insurance, Firestone Tire, Lehigh Valley Railroad, Macy, May Department Stores, Melville Shoe, New York Central, North American and Northern Pacific 8hs were down a point or more.

U. S. Steel, Westinghouse, National Biscuit, Electric Auto-Lite, Baltimore & Ohio, Atchison, Bohn Aluminum and Allied Chemical were at fractionally lower levels. Howe Sound and Phelps Dodge were at moderately higher levels.

The British pound was unchanged at $5.07½ and the French franc was slightly lower at 6.55½ cents.

Aside from attempting to interest sellers at Washington, brokerage circles scanned the weekly report of the Federal Reserve System with much interest.

Sales to 11 a. m. approximated 540,000 shares.

The report revealed a rise in the system gold certificates, on hand and due from the Treasury, of $130,000,000 while, at the same time, the country's monetary gold stocks increased $114,000,000.

The difference in the two totals was accounted for by additional sales of certificates by reserve banks by the treasury, representing gold which it bought abroad and which was bought by banks abroad in stabilization operations before resumption of the "modified" gold standard.

The gain in brokers' loans of $27,000,000 in the face of comparatively slow business on the stock exchange, was attributed in some quarters partly due requirements incident to recent treasury financing.

A further sign of economic improvement was seen in an increase during the week in bank clearings throughout the country. Dun & Bradstreet found that, for the first time in many months, each of 21 cities reporting a contribution owed a gain over last year.

Boston Wool Mart Trading Is Slow

"Trade is slow in the wool market but prices are quite firm. Original bag lines of 64s and finer territory wools bring 70-81c, scoured basis, on short French combing and clothing staple and 84-85c for lots consisting of good French combing and average strictly combing staple. Most sales in fleece lines are of very moderative volume," says the Boston office of the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Western Union Is in Express Pact

A combination of services by the Western Union Telegraph Co. and the Railway Express Agency is announced. Each company will accept business for the other. Initially 3600 Western Union offices will be equipped to transfer telegraphic shipments, but service will extend to every home equipped with a telephone.

Snow Is Keeping Central in Red

Although New York Central's loadings have improved sharply recently the company is still operating in the red, due mainly to costs of snow removal. A deficit is expected to be reported for January. With its best earnings' months coming in the fall, early informed quarters expect the road will show a substantial net on the stock for 1934. Loss for 1933 was around $5,400,000.

Net Is $29,913,918 On Associated Gas

Preliminary consolidated statement of Associated Gas & Electric System for year ended Dec. 31 shows profit of $29,913,918, after depreciation and taxes, but before interest, preferred dividends of underlying companies, etc., against $34,55,026 in 1932.

WAR SUPPLIES POURING INTO SIBERIA

Will there be "War Over Asia?" Linton Wells, trying to learn the answer to this ominous question, is in the Far East for Universal Service and the Boston American. In preceding articles, Wells has told how Russia is preparing for the attack Moscow believes will come in May of this year. Today, in his third article, Wells tells what the Soviet people and the Red Army think about it.

By LINTON WELLS

(World Copyright, 1934, by Universal Service, Inc.)

Vladivostok, Feb. 24—Gen. Vasili C. Blucher, commandant of the Soviet forces in Siberia, makes his headquarters today in Khabarovsk, 450 miles north of Vladivostok on the Amur river.

After crossing the long Amur river bridge en route across Siberia from Moscow, and steaming into clean station at Kharbarovsk, one comes to acute realization that he entered a potential area of war—that is, if outward manifestations of impending war are to be accepted as a criterion.

Khabarovsk is G. H. Q. and Blucher's headquarters—450 miles from this point of Japan's initial attack, "if war comes, and when."

PREPAREDNESS EVIDENT

War is in the air. The very atmosphere is surcharged.

Soldiers guard the station exits so exactly that an inquisitive foreigner cannot peer past the barriers.

All along the way, stations are cluttered with soldiers. Everything is hustle and bustle. Trucks loaded with military supplies rumble along.

Cavalry is in evidence, efficiently maneuvering with field artillery, and anti-aircraft guns.

MANY IN UNIFORM

In Vladivostok, with its population of 200,000, every third pedestrian is in uniform—army or navy —although very little fighting in the Far East will engage the Soviet navy.

Vladivostok Harbor itself is a cesspool of great activity. It is filled with ships flying the flags of Russia, Norway, Japan and the United States. The ships have come from Black Sea and other ports with grains, meats, fuel and other supplies so essential to warfare.

(The fourth article by Linton Wells on Russo-Japanese "War Fever," and the preparations for conflict in the Far East, will appear in the Boston American Monday.)

PROBERS TILT ON PUBLICITY

Washington, Feb. 24 (AP)—A roaring controversy over "propaganda" charges delayed today the windup of the Senate's two-year investigation of the munitions racket.

Richard Whitney, head of New York's "big board," issued last night a sharp denial that the exchange is flooding the country with "propaganda" against the Fletcher-Rayburn bill for government control of the exchange.

If his efforts to defeat the measure are propaganda, Whitney said, the constitutional right of free speech is dead.

In reply, Senate investigators pointed to fresh testimony that the New York exchange spent $1,000,000 in less than five years for publicity purposes.

"World's Best Bad Actor" Is Mourned

New York, Feb. 24 (INS)—Broadway today mourned the veteran Corse Payton, 67, who by his own admission was the "world's best bad actor." He died in Brooklyn hospital.

A few who appeared on the stage with him were Mary Pickford, Lillian and Dorothy Gish, Fay Bainter, Mary Miles Minter, Richard Bennett, Bert Lytell and Ernest Truex. The title "the world's best bad actor" was conferred upon him by the late Tad Dorgan, famous newspaper cartoonist.

Jury Investigates Welfare Island

New York, Feb. 24 (UB) — A grand jury investigating penitentiary conditions visited Welfare Island as a result of a spectacular raid last month by Correction Commissioner MacCormick. No statement concerning prison conditions

'MIND' SCIENCE LECTURE TOPIC

"Mind" is the subject of the lesson-sermon on which Christian Science practitioners and readers will be read in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, February 25.

Among the citations which comprise the Lesson-Sermon is the following from the Bible: "Fulfil ye my joy, that ye be likeminded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind. Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves. Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others. Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus" (Philippians 2:2-5).

The Lesson-Sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health With Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Having one God, one Mind, unfolds the power that heals the sick, and fulfills these sayings of Scripture, 'I am the Lord that healeth thee,' and 'I have found a ransom.' When the divine precepts are understood, they unfold the foundation of fellowship, in which one mind is not at war with another, but all have one Spirit, God, one intelligent, harmonious government in accordance with the Scriptural command: 'Let this Mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus.'"

New 'Animal' Discovered In Sea

Washington, Feb. 24 (AP)—The Smithsonian Institution brought out today a new 'model of ocean life—a "plant-animal" that eats meat after paralyzing it with poison.

The hitherto unknown species was dredged up along with thousands of other curious creatures just year by the Johnson Smithsonian expedition in the vicinity of the 27,000-foot "deep" off Puerto Rico.

The meat-eating plant-animals are actually highly developed animals which have no relation to plants but have taken on their outward appearance, explains Austin H. Clark, Smithsonian biologist.

They look more like lilies than anything else with "blossoms" brightly colored in red, yellow, green and purple. Out of water, however, the colors fade.

Abuses and Failures of Criminal Justice—A Nation-Wide Plague

"Few, if any, cities in the Union have, in recent years, been better governed than Cleveland, and this seems to be due largely to the keen interest in municipal affairs which has been shown by her citizens."—Encyclopedia Britannica, XIV Edition.

WITH Cleveland as our laboratory, let us see how criminal justice is administered in the "best governed" cities of America.

The research is easy. The facts are at hand.

For Cleveland happens to have a public-spirited citizen named William Feather, who was chosen to serve during the months of September, October, November and December, 1933, as Foreman of the Grand Jury of Cuyahoga County, and who took the job seriously.

And BECAUSE he took the job seriously, Mr. Feather and his Grand Jury investigated a number of matters that Grand Juries, under the American system, are supposed to ignore—and their inquiries led them to TWO important conclusions.

ON these points, Mr. Feather's findings—in which the fourteen other Grand Jurors unanimously concurred—were as follows:

1.—"Criminal justice is one of the FOULEST PLAGUES of modern city life."

2.—"The courts are run FOR THE CONVENIENCE OF THE LEGAL FRATERNITY and WITNESSES are ORDERED AROUND LIKE CATTLE."

The two scathing sentences occur in the OFFICIAL REPORT of the Cuyahoga County Grand Jury.

Ordinarily, of course, such truth-telling documents get nowhere.

They are "accepted" with complimentary thanks by a Presiding Judge, who politely "refers" them to a political District Attorney, who discreetly pigeon-holes them.

But William Feather had a different idea. "One thousand copies" of the Cuyahoga County Grand Jury's report have been distributed "in the hope that it may inspire a LITTLE THINKING that will lead to ACTION and CONTINUOUS VIGILANCE."

ACTUALLY, the report should be in every voter's household and ON THE DESK OF EVERY LEGISLATOR—for the "foul plague" that bestirred William Feather's honest indignation is not restricted to Cleveland.

The abuse of criminal justice disgraces every State and every community in America.

Unfortunately, Foreman Feather's conscientious report is too long for republication here. But a few of its salient observations merit replication. As examples:

"It seemed to the Grand Jury that whenever the PROTECTED THIEVES and GUNMEN fall into the hands of the police, EVERYBODY begins to worry . . . POLITICAL INFLUENCE is evidenced ALL DOWN THE LINE."

"TWENTY WAYS of escaping punishment for the commission of a felony have come to our attention, and ALL ARE KNOWN TO THE CROOKS AND THEIR LAWYERS, but are NOT KNOWN to the great mass of ordinary folk, who never fall into the hands of the police unless, perchance, they park their cars in the wrong place."

"The successful crooks can RUIN the successful prosecution of shootings, murders, stickups and bombings by perjured alibis, intimidation of witnesses, technicalities and COURT DELAYS."

"DELAY is the kingpin of defense strategy. Given THREE CONTINUANCES, any crook has better than a fifty-fifty chance to escape conviction IN THIS OR ANY OTHER COMMUNITY."

All that in Cleveland, mind you—and Cleveland is internationally famous as one of our BEST GOVERNED communities.

In the cities that are WORSE GOVERNED, crime conditions are inevitably WORSE.

And is there no cure for this "foul plague"?

William Feather's Grand Jury prescribed the cure on page thirty-six of their printed report:

"THE REFORMS THAT ARE NEEDED CAN BE ACCOMPLISHED BY THE PEOPLE AT THE POLLS.

"At the VOTING BOOTHS they can ELIMINATE THE OFFICIALS who are RESPONSIBLE FOR CRIME CONDITIONS."

Which is exactly right. And the place to begin is WITH THE LEGISLATURES, where shyster lawyers abound and where ALL ABUSES OF JUSTICE have had their origin in racketeering legislation framed to abet the lawyers' racket and to victimize the public whom the Legislatures are elected to serve.

THE PEOPLE will have to reform the administration of criminal justice.

And let the people begin NOW in EVERY STATE!

Let there be a campaign to clean up the Legislatures UNLESS THE LEGISLATURES IMMEDIATELY CLEAN UP THE COURTS.

LET US HAVE AN AMERICAN JUSTICE CAMPAIGN —a campaign for JUSTICE and HONESTY.

Start Fighting Back—NOW

When the Governor of Massachusetts and a Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court devote their Washington's Birthday addresses to an attack upon organized crime and banditry, the public certainly must be aroused by the shocking conditions which exist.

The evidence of the sway of desperate crime is everywhere.

Murder, robbery, bank holdups, racketeering and ordinary chiseling seem to be the order of the day.

Governor Ely would co-ordinate all the police forces of Massachusetts to wage a unified war upon unified crime. His words are ominous:

"Let's train officers to the exact performance of their duties, TO SHOOT AS THE CRIMINAL SHOOTS, to be like soldiers and not mere pedestrians."

Judge Lummus declared, with deliberation, that "we live in a reign of crime, organized, uncontrolled, defiant."

The public is appalled, he said, "by the inability of the authorities to cope with organized crime."

On the day that the country venerated the memory of the great statesman and soldier who founded the country, the public is urged to engage in a civil war of decency to rout the crime war that threatens the foundation of that very country.

New England is the last frontier of this savage crime war.

We had in this section of the country a reputation for honesty and decency and respect for law and order and the inherent right of the people to be secure in their possession of their life and property.

Mob law and gang rule concentrated first in Chicago, New York and other great metropolitan areas. We held our heads high in pride and we smugly boasted that Boston was the one great citadel of law and order in which organized crime would never gain a foothold.

Well, it is here now, in all its brazen defiance. Our people have been shot down in their peaceful pursuits. Courts have been intimidated and jurors brow-beaten. Important witnesses have been kidnaped and murdered. The United States mails have been robbed by a ring of criminals who mock the sanctity of human life and defy the power of government itself.

The patriotic people of New England face a crisis and it is in many respects as serious as any in which they have enlisted their patriotic service and determiantion in the past.

The Governor and Judge Lummus present some recommendations with which to face this crisis. They are mechanical in nature, but are worthy of adoption.

Police radio and teletype are essential. The police departments as a whole ought to be co-ordinated under a single leadership, military in character. A central detective bureau of so-called "strong-arm" men seems to be necessary, to fight fire with fire. The courts and judicial procedure ought to be overhauled, as well as pardons and paroles.

But above and beyond all these, a higher morale and a more competent leadership must be established among the police themselves. You can make all the laws and all the rules which human ingenuity can devise and you can equip the police with the most modern arms for attack and defense, but unless they have the courage and disposition to wage a real war upon the organized crime and banditry all the superficial devices will be a waste of time and money.

What the public wants is police chiefs and commissioners who will lead their men with the courage and gallantry and ability of the military generals.

Goodbye, Father Phil

The passing of the Rev. Philip J. O'Donnell brings a loss not only to his faithful and devoted parishioners at St. James' but to the community as a whole.

"Father Phil" was born in Roxbury and had passed his entire life here. He knew us and we knew him. For fifty-two years, as priest, counsellor and friend, he had moved among us. His comings were always welcome because he possessed those fine human qualities which men admier. He wa cordial, generous, kindly. The poor of the South End never knew, nor can they know in the future, a better friend.

Newspapermen especially appreciated his friendship. He established the early-morning mass for night-workers, and there editors, writers and mechanics, regardless of individual religious faith, sought the religious comfort which he made convenient for them by his thoughtfulness.

Goodbye, Father Phil! And may your eternal life be as happy as you have made the lives of so many people happy in this sphere.

Sandino Was a Criminal, Not a Patriot

By James T. Williams, Jr.

"Who so shedeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed."

The fate forecast in these words of Holy Writ has finally overtaken the Nicaraguan outlaw, whose atrocious crimes were committed under the stolen but high-sounding title of "General" Sandino.

Cowardice, cruelty and all uncleanness were the polluting and dominating vices that branded this wayward son of a highly respected small land owner in the coffee region near Managua, the capital of Nicaragua.

The story goes that in his early manhood this wayward son, due to a fight with a neighbor in which he wounded his opponent, left the country and remained for some years in Mexico, working for American firms around Tampico.

IN VILLA'S FOOTSTEPS

At that time the Mexican outlaw, Pancho Villa, was running his murderous courss in his own country. And while the young Sandino never joined Villa's assasins he apparently tried in later life to duplicate in Northern Nicaragua the heinous crimes that made Villa infamous.

Returning from Mexico shortly before the revolution in Nicaragua led by Moncada, afterwards president, Sandino was employed by an American mine owner, a Mr. Butters of California, as timekeeper in his mine in the mountain region of Northern Nicaragua, and quite close to the Honduran border.

With his background of experience in Mexico, he promptly organized the miners into what he called a "union." When the revolution broke out, Sandino marched his "union" to the South to take part in the uprising against the government of President Diaz as a leader under General Moncada.

From that time he seems to have had no military rank of any sort until he suddenly emerged with the self-assumed title of "general" at the time of the signing of the Tipatapa agreement on May 4, 1927, by Mr. Henry L. Stimson, the special representative whom President Coolidge sent to Nicaragua to investigate for him the situation in that country.

General Moncada gave General Frank R. McCoy, who supervised the elections of 1928, which brought Moncada from the field headquarters of a rebel chief to the presidency, these revealing facts about Sandino:

General Mcnada said that Sandino broke his word of honor that he would lay down his arms after the Tipatapa agreement, by the terms of which President Diaz and General Moncada agreed upon peace and general disarmament prepartory to an honest election.

Instead of surrendering his arms to the armed forces of the United States as he was pledged to do and as Moncada and his other followers did, Sandino took his troops back to the place where his gang of outlaws came from—on the extreme northern frontier of Nicaragua, one of the most inaccessible parts of Central America.

PATIENT EFFORTS

After that, Sandino continued to operate along the mountainous border between Nicaragua and Honduras, having been driven out of the populous region by the Guardia Nacionals and by the armed forces of the United States into the remote fastnesses of the border country.

Patient efforts were then made through Gen. Moncada and through Sandino's respected and hard-working father to induce him to redeem his promise to his country and turn in his arms and help in the pacification of Nicaragua. But Sandino was reluctant to go back to being a timekeeper. He professed to be the chief outlaw of Nicaragua to a relapse into law-abiding and self-supporting citizenship.

The heinous crimes and other Sandino, both against his own innocent and loyal countrymen and against the officers and men of the armed forces of the United States, is a sordid story by itself. It must be reserved for another day.

It holds a lesson for all Americans in the years ahead.

O. O. McIntyre -:- New York Day by Day

New York, Feb. 24—In the Dorothy Parker manner: Isn't it like me to draw whatever this is on my right for dinner? With my worries, she wants to know if I'm crossing this summer. I'm crossing the hill to the poorhouse but what's that to her? Wonder if my white tie ends are as jaunty as Clive Brooks'?

O. O. McIntyre

Green turtle soup makes me go barp but this is certainly the billiards. If Old High Tonsil wasn't looking I'd crunch a few crackers. She says she hears it will be dull on the Lido this season. Isn't that devastating? I must telephone Cobble so he can spawn an extra.

I look like someone she used to know. A lot of coconut milk! Well, she looks like Queen Esther at the cantata and what do you know about that! She loves some of my descriptive writing.

Thank goodness, we reached the fish without mentioning Freud. Maybe I'm too Jung! When I'm myself I get off things like that one after another. Keep you laughing hours. Either that's a cracker-crumb or a boot-nanny on the side of her neck. I'll try slyly to flick it off with my napkin. Missed!

Her father used to own the largest plantation in Louisiana. From the sawth! She and her sister were educated abroad. Hothouse flowers. Never mingled with people. She's being contaminated by some rag-weeds this large evening. "Why can't she keep quiet and let me hoe into this fish.

What did I think of the Hindu dancers? No use to say I didn't see them, she'll talk me into going. I thought they were swell. Such grace, such litheness, such entrecote! That last one will goal her. "Uncle."

Maybe she'd give up talking if I started eating with my knife. Or perhaps she'd swoon. I haven't a bad shoulder for swooning, at that. She wonders if I had been to the Matisse exhibit. No, but I have been to a Brooklyn Marathon dance and, up until my voice changed, was a fool for transfer pictures. That's about as far as I go in art.

Our Little Flower murmurs to the waiter: "Garcon, mettez un peu l'eau!" I know that one. She wants a dipper of water. Why not "Encore l'eau?" Anyway it's about time for her to yank her teeth in out of the weather. That molar type of beauty. Saw Tooth Tess, the dance hall girl. Teeth for three! And all air cooled.

Now they have started dancing. A cookie she calls it "dawnce-ing." She says she often fox-trotted with the Prince of Wales. Everybody has who visited Dondon. I've a notion to hell her around in an old-fashioned, waltz until she cries "Enough!"

* * *

This salad is nothing if not fragrant. I know, garlic! The buzzards will be circling soon. I'm going to fill up on it and knock a few people stiff. High Tonsil will want to run back to her Prince of Wales if she gets to the bawsis of me. I think I'll sulk awhile. When did I sulk last? O, I remember. The time they gave me that dribble-glass at Floyd Gibbons' party with me trying to talk litty to Elinor Glynn. But it was just an itty-bitty pet. Not a full-brown pout.

* * *

At last the coffee. Even if I haven't cut much of a swath I've at least kept her from worrying someone else. The way I am. Always thinking of others. Still they wont' appreciate me. Shakespeare was dead 20 years before he came into his own. Maybe this java will fit my spirits. Awk! It tastes like a jumble of old prunes and discarded dress shields heated over an invalid lightning bug!

MID-WINTER AMUSEMENT

February's almost over!
Time to think about the clover.
Candytuft and mignonette
And the dahlias we shall set.

Catalogues are in the mail now,
Let it sleet and let it hail now!
By the fire I'd sit and read
News of bulb and root and seed.

I am buried in the story
Of the phlox and morning glory,
Red hot poker's scarlet spike
And a hundred friends I like.

What if now the blizzard rages,
I am conning springtime's pages.
Through my window I can see Where petunia beds will be.

Soon when February closes
I'll be pruning back the roses.
In my dreams this moment, I

Human Side of the News; Courting Death

By Edwin C. Hill

Science, so Dr. George E. Vincent tells us, has forged another shackle for Yellow Jack. The doctor's announcement to the California Institute of Technology reveals the discovery of a serum which immunizes human beings to yellow fever. The world will hail the result and long remember it.

But the world, I imagine, has too soon forgotten what happened five years ago in Accara, a little seaport on the gold coast of West Africa. Three men were there on a great adventure—a Japanese, an Irishman and a Scotchman, working in common and seeking neither gold nor ivory nor a lion's head for the trophy room. Theirs was greater game. After it they went with heads up, hope high and with the full knowledge that death stalked beside them, ready to strike without even the warning that a cobra might give.

The Japanese was a bacteriologist, one of the greatest of all time, Dr. Hideyo Noguchi. The Irishman was a pathologist from London University, Professor Adrian Stokes. The Scot was a scientist on the staff of the Rockefeller Institute, Dr. William Alexander Young. And how they worked in the heat, in the God-forsaken hole! Not that they minded the conditions, for they were living apart from this plane.

Every cell in their brains, every fiber in their bodies was absorbed in that one thing—the finding of that malignant virus which, through the ages, had been a scourge to humanity. The trail was hot. They redoubled their efforts. Stokes wrote back to far away Albion:

"We have the fish hooked. Unless we are careless and break the tackle, it will only be a matter of time until we land him."

But they never brought the monster to gaff! He lashed about and stung them—Stokes, Noguchi and Young. One by one he fell, fever touched them. First the heaviness which an ordinary sore throat might bring, next the flush of the face and eyes. Temperatures rose higher and higher for two or three days and then came a steady drop until they were below normal.

Their eyes, at first enlarged, narrowed down to mere slits. The skin grew cold and the color of lemon. Next the dreadful "black vomit" which Paris, Rome and London knew in the Middle Ages when it struck ill alike, from the meanest peasant to the Pope of the Borgias. And then came death to Stokes, to Noguchi and to Young.
